The St. Joseph officials were particularly interested in Omaha's paving system, that feature of paying contractors for such improvements by bonds and allowing taxpayers to pay for same in ten years. The St. Joseph system is to declare a special tax for each paving district and allow property owners five years in which to pay the contractors, thus causing a lack of competition among contractors and higher rates for paving. A bill will be introduced at the coming session of the Missouri legislature containing many provisions now embodied in Omaha's city erter regarding the pavement improvements and payment for same.
