They acted from principle, in the interest of religion they could not approve such associations; they could not by tolerating them appear to approve them. They are not rebels against the laws of the country.

Trip.

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—(Special.)—General Booth, who has been here for the purpose of conducting a monster meeting at the free to accept d. bishops knew full well the consequences that were to follow: the spirit of the government was not hidden from their eyes; it was an era of persecution, but if no other escape from persecution were possible than the acceptance of the law of associations, they were ready to welcome persecution.

Against All Religion. The old spirit of Voltaire and the encyclopaediats of the eighteenth century never died out in France. It had an outburst of trimph in the revolution, when God was declared nonexistent and infamy itself, denoted the "Goddess of Reason," was uplifted to adoration upon the altar of the cathedral of Paris. It slumbered a while under succeeding imperial and royal regimes; it has reawakened to new vigor in the freedom allowed to thought and speech by the present republic.

This perty of infidels and athelets is far from being France, as I shall later say, but it is active, persistent, unserupulous, and it forces itself with vengeance to the front. It has grasped the helm of power and it steers the ship of state into the darkest depths of unbelief and irreligion. Yesterday it was Combos, the most bruish of all; today it is Clemenceau, somewhat more subdied in his haved, but yet a state of the power today from Port Dufferin and provided to the party of the most bruish of all; today it is Clemenceau, somewhat the provided in his haved, but yet a state of the provided in his haved, but yet a state of the provided here today from Port Dufferin and the provided here today from Port Dufferin and purished here today from P

Republican in Name Only. With such men and with others dividing with them public power, even if less violent adepts of irreligion, there reigns another idea—the omnipotence of the state. This was ever the plague of France—even when its rulers were devour Catholics. The state must control all agrencies of power. tate must control all agencies of power, t must brook no rival. Even the church nust be in the hands of the government. it must brook no rival. Even the church must be in the hands of the government. So was it with Louis XIV, and with Napoleon, so is it with the republic. The republic is a mame in France, it has been well said of it that it sleeps on the bed of Louis XIV. France has never understood the meaning of a republic, which is respect for private and personal liberty which is to leave as a property of the respect for private and personal liberty which is to leave as a property of the l take to the state only what the neopie, to take to the state only what is needed for the public weal. The most republican of republicans, seated in Parila. Metit, set out at one of control to their own liking. We are the state, they cray out, as Louis XIV once said: "I am the state," and the state is the great power and all must think and act as the state wills and as we will.

This is certainly the spirit of the infides who now rule the country, and I am not at all sure it were not to some degree at least the shirit of good Catholics who were they to be tomorray in the ascendancy should believe it their duty to make every one go to mass, as the present government, has arrived safely at Srinagar after a journey through the most remote portions of central Asia. He has brought back with him a quantity of highly interesting paintings on stucco, the backgrounds in many cases being of gold.

Power Greatly Centralized. I know France from the channel to the Modiferranean, I know its cities and its villages; I know its people—its aristocracy, its bourgeoisle and its peasantry—and I know them to be Catholic, How then explain the political situation? There are several causes to be noted. The masses are not used to political life. For ages

I shall ask congress upon its next day of session for authority to use our transport vessels to carry flour and other food to the famine-stricken region.

I recommend that contributions for the purchase of such food and other appropriate relief be sent to the American National Red Cross, which will take care of the expenditures.

Such contributions may be made either through the local Red Cross treasurers, at through the Department of State, or may be sent directly to Mr. Charles Hallam Keep, Red Cross treasurer, United States Treasury department, Washington, D.
