cross-examined Saturday morning. Congress Makes Land Laws. Judge Munger gave the parties involved in the Modisett land trial distinctly to understand Friday morning that congress, and not the Department of the Interior, made the laws which regulated the homestead business. He did so during the progress of a controversy as to the legality of certain filings made by widows of soldiers and certain rules prescribed by the Department of the Interior. The first witness to testify in the trial now on in the United States district court was put on the stand Friday morning in the person of Bruce Wilcox, register of the land office at Alliance. His testimony was wholly of a technical nature and related to the identification of homestead filings alleged to be fraudulent as appearing upor the records of his office. A question arose as to the legality of certain filings made by widows of soldiers and the rules of the Interior department relating to the act of residence as required by widows of soldiers. It was held by the defense that under an old ruling made by the department that residence on the land as an essential to acquisition of title was not required of the widows, and this claim was fortified by the announcement of a later ruling by the department, which directed that a recent construction of the hornestead laws made it necessary that residence on the land or a visit to the land once every six months would be required to secure title or patent. A circular to this effect had been sent out by the local land office officials, and one of these letters or circulars was offered in evi-dence. The government objected to the fhtroduction of the circular, and the objection was sustained for the present.
