SPEND MONEY AS IT COMES Improvident Habits of Young Works

ers Striving to Be "Good Fellows," The prodigality of the American young man is a pertinent subject of every-day discussion at the present time. Unlike his sire and his grandsire, he is not laying aside his first dollar and beside that placing his second and third, thus forming a permanent foundation for a future fortune.

The average youth today earns and spends with little thought for the future. In illustration, a young man a few evenings ago, while dining in company with a few jovial friends, at the close of the supper thoughtfully extended his opened palm to those who made up the party. entered upon my present job," he said, "I have drawn just $800.15, and to show what a careful and industrious man can do on occasion here is the 15 cents." The speaker was what is known as a "good fellow." He is ever a welcome comrade and has a reputation of always "spending his share" when out with "the boys." Other than being a good fellow he has practically no bad habits. He is a man of strictly moral habits, and the money all had gone for expenses termed "legitimate." He was drawing a comfortable salary at the same time, yet it had all gone, and he had but a full wardrobe and a circle of good friends to show

A Waukegan (Ill.) saloonkeeper recently found, while counting the cash in his at the close of a day's business, a dolf bill across the face of which was written with an indelible pencil, "The last of a fool's half million." The tragedy of the sentence was ominous, and one is wont to wonder how many of the half million similar bills preceded the last into the coffers

However, he had the misfortune to be supplied with a surplus of wealthy relaonce more to a similar amount. A friend called upon him as soon as the news was announced to congratulate him.
