story of Society Men Who Sacrificed Dignity to Caprice of School Girl—And Another Story.

To Mollie. Now winter's here I'd like to be Dear Mollie's errand fur. Then when she walked the avenue She'd take me out with her; I'd hang about her slender throat In graceful, clinging strands. And then, you see, I'd be her muff. And hold her dainty hands.—The Devotee.

Ever since the opening of the New Year there was witnessed in a series of fashionable weddings, numerous teas and a variety of entertainments, with just as many future plans embryo, there has been a predicted rush for the fashionable. Hurry and worry promised to be synonymous—worry as to how to keep all the engagements scheduled in one all day without conflicting. This has not been such a serious problem as was contemplated until the past week, when indifference to a good time has been relegated to the background and a storm of parties have followed principally bridge luncheons. Many more are on the calendar, and society is undergoing preliminary speed tests, to be tuned up to the pace it will have to go during the remaining days before Lent. Besides these last chances to do things that one might have been doing for the past few weeks, seem so much more attractive now that the time of penance in preparation for Easter is almost at hand. Society has practically dedicated this week to several attractive visitors—Mrs. John Meadows of Lincoln, guest of Mrs. Lydia Morrison; Mrs. Harvey Moss of Hastings, guest of Mrs. E. J. Spohn, and Mrs. Clarence Richmond Day, guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Smith. Almost every day of this week some large affair has been given in their honor. Mrs. Meadows and Mrs. Day left for their homes Saturday, and their absence will be felt in their set. Another large event which aided in distinguishing this week was the reception given by Mrs. Warren Switzer to introduce her daughter, Miss Alice Royall, the last of this season's debutantes to be presented. Miss Switzer has a charming personality, which will win for her a good season and a large circle of friends.

Since time began men have made themselves ridiculous for the sake of a woman, and have done it cheerfully and blindly. History abounds with instances where otherwise sane, reliable, level-headed men have sacrificed their future and their most sacred trusts, together with their dignity and respect, at the shrine of some fair woman. Omaha was recently treated to an exhibition of this sort; and now that the little miss primarily responsible is safely out of town, society is having all sorts of sport at the expense of her victims. As all know who pretend to keep posted on the correct thing, the "Teddy bear" made quite as much of a hit with the fashionable women of Paris as it did with the little folks with the nursery, and these cunning little namesakes of the president were for a time seen quite frequently in the company of milder on her shopping or pleasure tours as with her infant son or daughter in the park. Of course the fat got to New York but almost simultaneously a companion, absurdly developed in the shape of the "Daachhund."

He is an ugly little beast and his sawdust anatomy has been abbreviated and Americanized to resemble a parody on a Boston terrier, and equipped with a bark to match. Now it chanced that a little Omaha miss who happened to be with her parents last year and who is now attending a select "finishing" school in New York, adopted her dog and Teddy bear together with a choice collection of other fads with which to regale her Omaha friends when she came home for the holiday vacation. On several occasions people riding on the DeWitt or Farnam cars were amazed to see this smartly gowned young miss complacently carrying one of her sawdust pets, but it remained for a popular young fellow of the younger set to be sacrificed to this caprice.

He invited her to attend the theater and, knowing her careful rearing was not sullied when she asked that a third seat be reserved. He was amazed, however—so the story goes—when the evening came, and instead of a chaperone, he was informed that the extra seat was for her Teddy bear. Remonstrance proved unavailing and the young miss proceeded to carry him. On another occasion this young miss was a member of a box party. This time it was her dog's turn. He was not only very much in evidence, but between acts very emphatically his presence by barking vigorously in response to the manipulation of his owner's hand on the DeWitt or Farnam for the house that rivaled that offered on the stage.

No one enjoys a good joke more than Omaha's fashionable, especially when the laugh goes the round of the clubs and dancing rooms in two bachelor members of their own set. What is funnier still, these two bachelors are quite unsuspecting of the merriment they are causing. It all hinges on the few moments' stay of an attractive young divorcee, who passed through Omaha recently on route to Europe from her home in Denver. She is a tall, stumping brunette and during her brief stay here was devoted to a brisk walk up and down the station platform with these two willing bachelors, the trio attracting general attention not only with the huge bunch of violets and red roses she carried, but by the occasional sniffs of the attendant escorts. But when the parting came it was amazingly tender for two such calloused bachelors. But somebody saw "Eaw" and now the incident is a joke among the friends of these two men.

Cards have been received in Omaha announcing the marriage of Lieutenant William Benton Cowin, United States army, and Katherine, daughter of Major and Mrs. Nat. Poyntz Plister, on the 9th of January, 1907, at Trinity church, Zamboungue, Mindanao, P. I. Lieutenant Cowin, who is now with the Third cavalry on service in the islands, is the son of Captain and Mrs. John C. Cowin of Omaha and is well known here as one of the younger men of the city. He was just home from Yale in 1906 when the war with Spain broke out and entered the service as a captain of volunteers. At the close of the war he was attached to the regular establishment and assigned to the cavalry arm. He visited in Omaha last year just prior to the sailing of his regiment.
