The president's letter in full follows:

The white house, washington, March 14.—My Dear Sir: Numerous commercial organisations of the Mississippi valley have presented petitions asking that I appoint a commission to prepare and report a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States.

I have decided to comply with these requests by appointing an inland waterways commission, and have asked the following gentlemen to act upon it. I shall be much gratified if you will consent to serve. Hon. Theodore F. Burton, chairman; Benator Francis G. Newlands, Senator William Warner, Hon. John H. Bankhead, General Alexander Mackensie, Dr. W. J. McGee, Mr. F. H. Newell, Mr. Gifford Pinchot, Hon. Herbert Knox Smith.

In creating this commission I am in-

Mr. F. H. Newell, Mr. Cifford Pinchet, Hon. Herbert Knox Smith.

In creating this commission I am influenced by broad considerations of national policy. The control of our navigable waterways lies with the federal government and carries with it corresponding responsibilities and obligations. The energy of our people has hitherto been largely directed toward industrial development connected with field and forest and with coal and iron, and some of these sources of material and power are already largely depleted; while our inland waterways as a whole have thus far received scant attention. It is becoming clear that our streams should be considered and conserved as great patural resources. Works Jesigned to control our waterways have thus far usually been undertaken for a single purpose, such as the improvement of navigation, the development of power, the irrigation of arid lands, the protection of lowlands from flood or to supply water for domestic and manufacturing purposes. While the rights of the people to these and similar uses of water must be respected, the time has come for merging local projects and uses of the inland waters in a comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country. Such local projects and uses of the inland waters in a comprehensive plan designed for the benefit of the entire country. Such a plan should consider and include all the uses to which streams may be put, and should bring together and co-ordinate the points of view of all users of water. The task involved in the full and orderly development and control of the river systems of the United States is a great one, yet it is certainly not too great for us to approach. The results which it seems to bromise are even greater.

Ratirond Service Inadequate. hef. Representative railroad men to be ut that the products of the northern incrior states have doubled in ten years, while the railroad facilities have increased out one-eighth, and there is reason to doubt whether any development of the railroads possible in the near future will suffice to teep transportation abreast of production. there appears to be but one complete remisedy—the development of a complementary system of transportation by water. The research congestion affects chiefly the people of the Mississippi vailey, and they demand relief. When the congestion of which hay complain is relieved the whole nation will share the good remise.

While rivers are natural resources of the first rank, they are also liable to become destructive agencies, endangering life and property; and some of our most notable engineering enterprises have grown out of efforts to control them. It was computed by Generals Humphreys and Abbott half a century ago that the Mississippi alone sweeps into its lower reaches and the guilt 400,000,000 tons of floating sediment each year tabout twice the amount of material to be excavated in opening the Panama chall, besides an enormous but unmeasured amount of earth saits and soil matter carried in solution. This wast load not only causes its channels to clog and flood the lowlands of the lower river, but renders the flow capricious and difficult to control. Furthermore, the greater part of the sediment and soil matter is composed of the most fertile material of the fields and pastures drained by the smaller and larger tributaries. Any plan for utilising our inland waterways should consider floods and their control by forests and other means; the protection of bottom lands from injury by overflow and uplands from loss by soil wash; the physics of sediment ways of purifying them; the construction of dams and locks, not only to facilitate novices as whole.

Development of Other Resources.

Development of Other Resources. It is not possible properly to frame so arge a plan as this for the control of our rivers without taking account of the oriers without taking account of the orierly development of other natural resources. Therefore, I sek that the Inland Waterways commission shall occasion the relations of the stream to the use of all the great permanent natural resources, and thair conversion for the making and mainmance of prosperous homes. thair conversion for the making and main-manne of prosperous homes.

Any plan for utilising our inland water-ways, to be feasible, should recognize the means for executing it aiready in existence, both in the federal departments of War.

Development of Tyanspertation by Water Must Be Made with View to General Growth of Business.

Washington, March 17.—Complying with petitions presented by numerous commercial organizations of the Mississippi spiley, President Roosevelt has decided to kingoint an inland waterways commission, whose duty it will be to prepare and report a comprehensive plan for the improvement and control of the river systems of the United States. Eight public men have been asked to serve on the commission and incompleted in the national incomplete in proportion to the magnitude of the bene in proportion with the $17,000,000 of capital now invested in steam railways in the United States—an amount that would have seemed enormous and incredible haif a century ago. Fet the investment has been a constant source of profit to the people and without it our industrial progress would have been impossible.

The questions which will come before the Inland Waterways commission must necessarily relate to every part of the United States and affect every interest within its borders. Its plants should be considered in the light of the widest knowledge of the country and its people and from the most diverse points of view. Accordingly, when it work is sufficiently advanced, i shall add to the commission certain consulting members with whom I shall ask that its recommendations shall be fully discussed before the commission should include both a general statement of the problem and recommendations as to the marmer and means of attacking it. Sincerely yours.

Without wishing in any degree to disparage the work along any of the lines represented in our Federation, there seems to me not one which benefits so many people, of so many classes, of so many ages, as civic betterment. That the roads have done a great part in developing the state is gratefully acknowledged. That the people have been willing to reciprocate is evidenced by the many grants and bonds voted the roads to aid in construction. If the good doctor and Banker Yates would come out to Columbus and attempt to make a reasonable income from an investment in land by raising wheat and corn under present tariff rates they might perhaps change their views. The rate on wheat from Columbus to Omaha, 12 cents per 100 pounds, is from two to five times as much per ton per mile as it is to carry the same load on east or south. It does not occur to us that there is

The average citizen is but little interested in the passenger rate. The belief that prevalls throughout the rural districts of Nebraska that a much higher freight rate is being charged than should be is responsible for the agitation that has been going on for the past year or two. It does not look as though many of the rates in force could be successfully defended. That the people do not mean to be unjust is generally admitted, and we think that Mr. Harriman's proposition that the railroads, the public and the government get together will soon settle the vexed question.
