Juror Harney

About ten minutes after we reached the jury room we took the first ballet, and it resulted in a vote of eight for conviction of murder in the first degree and four for absolute acquittai. The men who voted for conviction were Smith, foreman; Pfaff, Fecke, Brearley, Denne, Bolton, Newton and Gerstman. The men who voted to set Thaw free were Pink, Harney, Fraser and Steele.

Thirty minutes clapsed before the second Thirty minutes clapsed before the second ballot was taken and then the votes remained unchanged. A third ballot was taken at 9:45 p. m. on Wednesday, and still there was no change in the opinions of the jurors. Thereafter, there was considerable discussion among the men, but most of the night hours were spent in sleep and no ballot was taken until 4:30 Thursday afternoon. This was several hours after the jury had appealed to the court for a re-reading of the testimony given by eye-witnesses of the tragedy. The fourth ballot marked one change in the vote. Four of the jurors still held out for an acquittal, but of the rest. Bernard Gerstman, the twelfth juror, changed his vote from murder in the first degree to that of manslaughter in the first degree.

About two hours later a fifth ballot was taken and this showed a decided change taken and this showed a decided change on the part of the jurors who voted for conviction. It also proved that the effort of the four jurors who voted for an acquittal had not been altopether in valn, for they succeeded in winning over to their side Juror Denne, who up to that time had voted for conviction. The rest of the jurors, with the exception of George Pfaff, who had voted for murder in the first degree, decided that Thaw was only guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. The men in favor of acquittal—largely on the ground of insanity, it is said—would not change their ballots, and in the end won over to their side one of the eight who favored conviction. One Vote Unchanged, One Vote Unchanged.

It will be noticed that the only man who voted consistently according to his first opinion was George Pfaff, jurer No. 2, who from the first ballot adhered to his belief that Harry Thaw was guilty of murder in the first degree. Equally as consistent in their belief to the contrary were Jurers Pink, Harney, Praser and Steele, who from the outset decided that in their opinion Thaw was not guilty. He successfully held the twelve men in check and was the first to suggest when it was seen that there was no possibility of a verdict being reached to report the matter to Justice Fitzgerald and leave the further disposition of the case to his judgment.

Jurer Joseph B. Rolton said:

Methods of Criminal Courts in the

of Harry K. Thaw, for the murder of Stanford White, which was at first intense here, lagged during the later stages of the proceedings. However, the unexpectedly prolonged deliberations of the jury and the novelty for the British public of the circumstances surrounding the final scenes raised curiosity here to a fever point to learn what the outcome would be. Within a few minutes of the receipt of the cable dispatch announcing that the jury had been discharged the streets of London, in spite of the lateness of the hour, echoed with the shouts of the newsboys, the newspapers were bought up eagerly and the Mean temperature.... people everywhere discussed with unusual avidity the likelihood of a fresh trial. the comparative leniency of American opinion toward homicides and what Englishmen consider a lack of dignity and method in the proceedings of the courts, It has been the boast of Englishmen that punishment invariably followed killing here, January, and the unexpected wave of sentidiscussion as to whether the swift and stern processes of British law will not in

According to Mr. Garratt, the consensus of legal opinion in London is that the jury would have found Thaw guilty of murder with a strong recommendation to mercy, which would have meant a long or short term of imprisonment at the discretion of the home department.
