Where Do the Old Things Got

People kept old things a generation ago because they still had time to keep them.
They kept them because they had time to nurse the sentiments that come of the sense of association—which sense made them want to keep them. Modern lives have no attics any more than modern houses. They haven't the space to spere.
They don't keep old diaries on their own account, her old letters, ribbons, trinkets, photographs, on their friends account.
Especially not old photographs. Friends last longest to the really modern person when they are of the type whose various metamorphoses, as time goes on, are of the rapid and painless sort, and who, through all changes, keep abreast with the hour.
Why, then, photographs, or any other memorial, of periods antecedent to the actual memont—periods when your friend was a different being, and so were you?

But where do all the old things go? They cannot all lightly fleat into the wastepaper basket, along with the pretty dross of menus and cotillion favors semisentimentally preserved for half a season—Soribper's Magazine.
