

MUZZLE CASES GET IN COURT

Alleged Violations of Mayor's Proclamation Are Brought Before Judge Crawford.

Merely me, what next? Mayor Dahlman on learning that a dog wearing a muzzle had bitten Tom Hollister, lawyer, at Sixth and Wirt streets Saturday afternoon.

Prosecutions for failure to conform with Mayor Dahlman's proclamation regarding the muzzling of dogs are entering the regular business of the police court. City Prosecutor Daniel Friday swore out complaints against B. J. Christenson, 818 North Twenty-fifth avenue; J. W. Griffith, 223 Cuming street; and Thomas Hookkellow, 321 Franklin street, while another complaint was filed Saturday morning against J. W. Pierson, 307 Decker street, and a case against George Williams, Thirteenth and Chicago streets, was called before Judge Crawford and continued until Monday morning.

The matter of the Pierson dog was the most serious reported. The complaint stated a 2-year-old child in a family named McGovern, living near the Pierson home, was badly bitten about the legs by the dog and that the boy is in a critical condition, not only from the wounds, but from shock of fright. No prosecution will be made in the case, however, it is understood, if Pierson will consent to have the dog killed. It was not believed the dog was mad, but Chief of Police Donahue advised the family to have a doctor make a careful examination.

Several complaints of unmuzzled dogs came from the vicinity of Twenty-fourth and Locust street, and a white bull dog was said to be frightening passers-by at Twenty-ninth and Leavenworth streets Friday night, growling at them, but offering to do no further mischief. The animal was not muzzled.

Dr. George L. Miller was in police court Saturday morning to witness the proceedings.
