he conference meets. DUBLIN, May M .- John Redmond holds that the Irish convention decision in retecting the Irish council bill had three weighty effects. The devolution idea, he says, has gone by the board; the influence of the Rosebery group in the cabinet has been killed, and the strength and cohesion of the Irish party has been secured. Interviewed on the future of the home rule movement, Mr. Redmond today declared to the Associated Press that it was his conviction that the convention's action would not delay home rule a single hour. He said a powerful and friendly governmment had endeavored to embody the devolution idea in the bill and had failed and that no future government would renew the attempt. He anticipated that the present Parliament would be dissolved in 1908 to enable the government to appeal to the country against the House of Lords. The liberal party's Irish program must now be home rule, while had the convention accepted the devolution bill it would have been rejected in the House of Lords and devolution would have remained the high water mark of liberal policy, not marely in the present Parliament, but in the next.

Death of Two Daughters.

After an eastern trip, including Wash-ington, and a short time of boarding, the McKinleys purchased the home on North Market street which in later years became famous as the McKinley cottage. It was during their short sojourn in this home that Mrs. McKinley's health broke down under the burden of grief that was theirs. There were born to them two daughters.
