REMOVABLE PARASOL COVERS Numerous Home-Made Tops Are Now Used on a Single Frame.

One of the cleverest contrivances devised this year to minimize the expense incldental to keeping pace with fashion's demands is the removable sunshade cover and the frame that goes with it. The "parasol to match" is one of the expensive luxuries if bought, but the ingenious from any umbrella maker. From this the that will hold firm, preventing splitting or fit close around the rod. At intervals inside and attached to the seams of the panrow ribbon about six inches long, of the same color as the top. These should be fastened in the middle and are to be tied around the spokes of the frame in little bows, to hold the cover to place. At the end of the seams a strong, small silk cord is attached in the same way, and this is tied through the eyelet in the spoke holding the cover tight on the frame. By this arrangement one frame may be used for as many tops as the woman has inclination or ingenuity to provide. A bow of ribbon may be used as a finish at the top, tied around the rod.

The lingerie sunshade is one of the daintiest provisions made for the summer girl this year, but the cold weather has materially limited its season of usefulness and so made it rather expensive.

It will be a most charming accompaniment to the midsummer gown and the lingerie hat, but the fashion writers say that it is to take the place of the hat to a very large extent. It comes in white and colors such a variety of colors, too-and may be of material to match or of a color con trasting with the gown. For use with the sheer white gowns the white embroidered linen or the more delicate shades will be used. The white sunshades are perhaps the handsomest and many of them are elaborately trimmed with hand embroidery put on in border and sometimes trailing up the panels in vine effect. Again, the embroidery is scattered over the parasol in conventional figures or as carelessly strewn flowers. The embroidery is done in white or colors, but the white is more practicable as such covers may be removed and laundered. For use with the gingham and pop lin gowns some of the shades are made of the same material with plain band borders of white or contrasting colors and others untrimmed. For the use with the morning shopping frock the sunshade is of the same material as the dress. It is smaller than the ordinary parasol and the frame is light. This is to take the place of the hat, and traveling, driving, hot day motoring, etc. over the wrist and so carried while not in ored natural wood and the frames are painted white or are left unfinished and the spokes end with little steel, bone or

"Parodoxical as it may seem," said the night clerk at the Millard hotel, where the funeral directors are making their headquarters, "we had to wait for the undertakers and the embalmers to liven things up around here. They are the liveliest bunch we have had for many a day. If you want to hear a funny story," he said to a casual observer, "go over there and listen to Benjamin Pierson of the grievance committee." Pierson was telling a story about W. M. Hill of Hebron, who is secretary of the Board of Embalmers, and is engaged in the undertaking business in Hebron.

"You see, Hill is a very nervous man." he went on, "and they did say that the preacher preached an unusually long funeral sermon that day. He was preaching on the resurrection, and as the afternoon wore away Undertaker Hill began to get nervous, for it was a long ways to the cemetery. He finally whis-pered to a dencon at his right and asked, 'does your pastor always preach such long funeral sermons?

'Well, that's a good sermon,' replied "Yes, I know it, whispered Hill, 'and I believe in the resurrection. But do you know I'm beginning to fear that we won't get this man buried in time for
