TRAPPING LIONS AND TIGERS

White Men Learn the Secret of Taking Beasts of Prey.

EXTERMINATING TROPICAL PESTS

Four Hundred Lions and Hyenas Harvested Last Year on a Single German East African Farm.

A new way of dealing with formidable wild animals is now being widely employed in tropical regions.
Until within a few years efforts to trap the larger beasts of prey were nearly always unsuccessful. Extraordinary precautions were taken in setting the traps. Very strong traps were provided, the traps being kept from rust and handled with instruments so that the odor from the human hand might not be perceptible; but all in vain.
These precautions are now thrown to the winds. Under the new plan white men are having great success in trapping lions, tigers, leopards, bears, hyenas, jackals and many others of the less famous prowlers.
These animals cause great loss of cattle and other domestic creatures and also cost the lives of many human beings every year. The governments in nearly all tropical countries now have close times during which the hunting of harmless wild animals, such as elephants, zebras and antelopes is forbidden in order that they may have an opportunity to breed and thus be saved from extinction. But the protecting arm of the law is not extended over beasts of prey.
New Scheme Has Traps.
Specially strong steel traps are now employed for catching these animals. The jaws of the trap are so deep that when a lion sets foot upon the spring, the trap closes upon the leg above the knee and within two or three inches of the body.

An advertisement of a certain German trap appearing in a colonial newspaper last month has an affidavit asserting that on a certain plantation in German East Africa 400 beasts of prey, including lions, leopards and hyenas, were successfully trapped last year. The fact that the extermination of these animals by trapping now appears to be practicable is the cause of much rejoicing among tropical colonists.
Wherever one or more species of the larger beasts exist they are a source of trouble to white men who are opening farms or raising live stock. In a serious undertaking for a lion or an African leopard to kill the strongest horse or the largest ox.
Herds are often decimated by their ravages, all the poultry may be killed in the night, and hides within reach are destroyed, and jackals will even steal beasts of prey to eat on them. M. Klenz, a farmer, writes from German Southwest Africa that when he kills a sheep or steer it is not necessary to bury the offal, for prowlers the very next night will clean it up and carry it off to the last morsel.
The success of trapping the largest beasts of prey is due to improvements in the trap and in the methods of using it. The traps now made for this purpose are proportioned to the strength of the strongest animal that can get into them.
Setting the Trap.
A shallow hole is dug and filled with moss so as to bring the trap nearly to the level of the ground, the moss helping to keep it exactly level. The trap and the ground around it are then covered with earth free from stones. Over this leaves of grass are strewn.
A few bits of bait are scattered among the leaves from a foot to a foot and a half from the spring of the trap. The bait whose fine nose detects the meat approaches at night, hunts the tidbits in the litter and while picking them up nine chances in ten he will spring the trap.

This implement has some appurtenances which have only recently been used. It was formerly the practice to fasten the trap on the spot, but the new way of trapping has a different device.
The trap is attached to a strong stout chain, at the end of which is a three-pronged anchor with points almost as sharp as needles. When caught the animal will haul the trap with its chain and anchor out into the brush. At every instant the anchor is catching in the ground or scrub. The animal cannot travel far, for every step means a pull on its imprisoned limb, and the scars which the anchor makes on the ground and underbrush are a sure guide to the crippled brute.
The farmer may be awakened by the first frightened howl of his victim, but he will wait till morning before investigating the matter. A few minutes will take the animal into the bush, and his outcries soon cease. In the morning when convenient the farmer will follow the trail, rifle on shoulder, knowing perfectly well that he can safely approach the brute within two or three rods and put an end to his misery with a well-aimed bullet.
Easy as Lyons.
The experienced trapper today does not take the slightest pains to conceal his participation in setting the trap. He handles the trap he would a hoe, puffs away at his pipe, does not care if the trap is rusty, and puts no oil on it, as was formerly done to disguise odor. In fact, he carries out the work as simply as though he were catching a muskrat.
Here are some of the latest statistics of trapping big beasts of prey in tropical regions. On one coffee plantation in district U-S-B, German East Africa, three tigers were caught in two days near the remains of two oxen they had killed. Missionary A. Mayer in British Bechuanaland caught three lions in a week, besides many other beasts of prey. Theodor Hartmann on plantation M in German East Africa trapped 46 beasts of prey last year. A. von Quast on another plantation trapped in one month two lions, eight leopards and one hyena, all but one lion and one leopard being caught in the same place. In sixteen months he trapped 204 beasts of prey, for which he received bounty amounting to 1,500 marks.

C. Haverbeck trapped three lions in November of last year. C. Forstmann reports from the Dutch Indies the trapping of two royal Bengal tigers and three bears, while H. Janson in German Southwest Africa has recently trapped four leopards, eighty hyenas, 100 jackals and thirty-six foxes.
These facts show that the steel trap is going to have a very important part in ridding the world of dangerous beasts of prey.

SAFEGUARDING BOYS AND GIRLS

Temptation of City Life and Remedies Proposed—Results of an Inquiry.

An investigation conducted by a committee of the common council of Milwaukee to discover why boys and girls of that city go wrong has not been fully completed, but enough information has been obtained to warrant the conclusion that the objectionable conditions which prevail in Milwaukee are the result of city life and are common to all large cities.
Among the agencies which Milwaukee people hold responsible for the corrupting of young people and which they believe are equally active in other large cities are the following:
Undesirable home influences.
The indifference of the blind fondness of parents in many homes of the better sort.
The penny arcades, their tendency to promote flirtations and the opportunity which they present to the petty thief.
The 5-cent theaters and other places of cheap amusement conducted without proper supervision, not so much because of the nature of the entertainment itself, but because they promote the habit of hanging about the streets and forming chance acquaintances.
Sensational displays on the billboards.
Pool rooms and bowling alleys which allow young boys to loaf in them.
Lack of supervision of boarding houses which advertise rooms to let to young girls.

The inadequate enforcement of the compulsory education and child labor laws and of laws prohibiting the sale of liquors to minors, the sale of cigarettes and the attendance of young girls at saloon dance halls without their guardians present.
Indecent laws restricting disorderly houses and poor enforcement of such laws as exist.
Lack of opportunity for wholesome enjoyment, such as public play grounds and social centers.
As remedial agencies constructive rather than stricter prohibitive legislation is likely to be recommended to the council.
"Give the boys a place where they can play ball without keeping a lookout for the policeman," suggests H. H. Jacobs, warden of the University of Wisconsin settlement, situated in the heart of the Polish district, "and you have taken a long step toward the solution of the problem. Give them a good club with gymnasium facilities under intelligent and sympathetic supervision and they will desert the gang which meets in alleys and which is a training school for thieves and worse." In this statement is found the keynote of the majority of the recommendations. Among the propositions favored are the following:
The erection by the city of neighborhood houses equipped with reading rooms, rooms for games and dances and club work, bath rooms and reading rooms, the houses to be in charge of experienced workers.
The opening of the public schools after school hours as social centers and gathering places for supervised clubs.
The establishment of properly equipped and properly conducted municipal playgrounds so located as to be easily accessible to the children, and the use of the Polish district, "and you have taken a long step toward the solution of the problem.
