CASTLES OF MILLIONAIRES
 Completeness of Country Estates of Some of America's Rich
 In buying land for a city house the millionaire deals with square feet; but for a country mansion he purchases a tract of so many square miles. This extensive scale is carried through in all the arrangements. When the estate is ready for occupancy the owner finds himself lord of a beautiful acreage; contributing to his every luxurious want—all from its own resources. To plan a country house is almost like planning to build a village. The large estate is a very complete affair indeed. Its center is the house, which must be large enough to not only properly accommodate the owner and his family, but it must contain suites of rooms for the numerous guests with which it will be filled for the week-ends and for longer periods. The stable and the carriage house are, in their way, quite as necessary as the dwelling. Many a great estate vicer with the residence does not contain a single acre of land. If the estate is a large one covering many acres, there is a farm house for the farmer, a farm barn and outbuildings in which each particular industry of the farm will have its own headquarters. If the owner is addicted to polo there is a third and complete stable for the ponies. There is a chicken house for the chickens and other fowls, and, if this feature is sufficiently developed, a special residence for the person having this matter in charge. Dogs, if kept in ample variety, will have well appointed kennels and a caretaker's house in close proximity. There is a dairy, with perhaps a springhouse and cooling room for the milk, and a well-fitted room in which the butter will be made. The market-garden has its array of hot-beds, and the conservatories, in which rare plants are propagated for the outdoor gardens. Nor should the automobile-house be overlooked, since this popular vehicle competes with the horse in meeting the needs of the house transportation; and, as likely as not, a repair shop forms a necessary adjunct to it. Buildings that minister to the physical necessities of the estate are also numerous. Every sequestered estate—and almost all country estates are sequestered, since that is an item of value in living in the country—requires its own water supply. It is needless to say that it is often a most expensive feature, calling not only for steam pumps and elaborate piping, but for special machinery in their developed form will be lined withenameled brick—New Broadway Magazine.
 "Mr. Middleman, as I desire to propose a question."
 "Very well, Mr. Tambo."
 "Why do they designate that beautiful southern city as 'the city of waterworks'?"
 "That's easy. Because it makes your mouth water."
 "Now, near de answer. It's called a waterworks because 'fo' cut it in de 'surtin'—ob de spring reminds me, 'ob broke in de other end man, 'ma old daddy went out to get some water one day an he got de spring."
 "Was he drowned?"
