Mrs. O'Gorman Carries Case to Council and Triumphs.

BUILDING INSPECTOR LOSES OUT

Effort to Secure Destruction of Condemned Building Fails When it Comes to a Show

Down.

Mrs. Mary O'Gorman and Thomas Evans prevalled in the hearing given by the city council Friday morning to those persons who own buildings noted for condemnation building inspector. A representa-Mye of the Omaha Bridge and Terminal ompany reported that a barn condemned by the inspector had been demolished but the inspector had been demolished, but other owners either forgot or ignored the Pailure to appear did not injure their cause, as Mrs. O'Gorman, alone and singlehanded, carried her point and on motion of Councilman Brucker all other cases followed the precedent established in her case. The buildings under consideration were 1501 Webster street, owned by Mrs. O'Gorman; 108 North Tenth street owned by Thomas Evans; the Cambridge hotel, owned by the S. D. Mercer company, and a number of barns in different parts of

Mrs. O'Gorman Wins Case.

The proceedings opened with Mrs. O'Gorman on the stand. She declared her building not to be a menace to the neighborod, and after considerable discussion the building inspector admitted that it was in no danger of collapsing. The matter was, motion, continued until further orders. Councilman Brucker opposed the motion, desiring to have the building condemned and demolished. After a hearing on the Evans building Mr. Brucker moved that follow the course of the O'Gownan building, as he did not desire the council to appear in the role of playing favorites. This motion prevailed and then, without calling for other owners, a motion was adopted that the same action be taken in case of all other property.

City Short on Funds. Later it developed that the majority of the councilmen voted with Mr. Brucker because the city is in no position to enforce an order of demolition at the present time, an order of demolition at the present time.

Since its unappropriated general fund is practically exhausted, and there are no Whyte of Anaconda are at the Paxton.

der the law the cost of demolition is taxed against the property, but the city must wait practically two years before this tax can be collected, and councilmen think it cannot afford to wait. Building Inspector Withne tirely satisfied with the action taken and declared that in one case where a building had been condemned by the council he pro posed to take action in August if the owner does not, even though he must advance the cost from his own pocket.

corners, and one between each cornerthe architecture so harmonizing and the interior vista so bringing out and blending the curves and lines that strangers passing by would stop to look and wonder at such a charming setting for home life. 'We are seven," it seemed to say, "but we are one in effort to combine true home and social life." In the center well back oward the alley was a one-story with garden roof building, combining a suite of rooms for general assembling, with a large dining room in the rear, and back of that, almost on the alley, but giving coom for a small court opening into the alley, a large three-story building comprising kitchens and laundry, opening toward the general building in the center, out separated by a sod of foliaged green. The homes were built with a small court the rear, open roofed, but side screened. and the roofs were gardens with a glass screened room in the center or at one corner of the corner building as a sort of tower. There were no laundries or kitchens in the homes, the meals all being ordered from the sevenfold kitchen, and the laundry work also done there. A system of cleaning was also at the service of each house, which now has materialized into the vacuum method, that made things hygienically clean. Each house could have their own maid to set and wait upon the table in their own private dining room or could have such service by the hour from the supply house. When any family de sired to give a large function, the public receiving and dining rooms could be reserved by them, smaller functions being held in their own homes and catered t from the supply house. Thus they could have a private home, or a club house as were, at will, with home life or socialife both attainable without seeking for !

When the death sentence was procounced on the beast Officer Var Dusen led him away. It is not very often that a death penalty is exacted at the station and there were many in the court room who listened intently for the last yelp There was a shot and a sigh of relief swept the room. In a moment, however, another shot followed and the sympathetic listeners felt certain that doggie was out of his misery. But before the second sigh of relief had died there came a third shot. At that Judge Crawford dispatched an officer to the barn to find out if the dog was being used as a target for long-distance practice or had really been hit at a distance of three inches at the third trial. The head will be sent to Chicago Pasteur institute to be examined for rabtes.
