The post mortem question, among other things, will be discussed, President Swift mentioning this which was the principal work today.

High Business Standards.

"While we regret," said Mr. Swift, "the passsing of the 7-cent hog, we rejoice that his memory bears no taint of post-mortem and that he left with us the ever welcome 7-cent steers and the lowly sheep, with his high-priced fleece and strong-selling mut-

Mr. Swift said that live stock exchanges for years had been the butt for shafts of cheap ridicule or the basis for criticism, born either of malice or ignorance. But now he said there was a better understanding of the proposition, that these organizations are formed primarily to preserve and maintain the absolute integrity of contract, and to guarantee to every man who patronizes our markets an absolute, open and unquestionable square deal. He spoke of competitive organizations, which, he said, "though self-styled as cooperative, in the light of development would lead to the absolute conviction that the co-operation, if any, was limited in extent and confined largely to the individual promoters," and added:

Public Clamor Played Part.

This movement at its inception sought to take advantage of the public clamor aroused in other countries and cleverly and unscrupulously tried to ensulf us in the same frenzied wave, and at the same time ride the crest to a port of financial blessings for itself.
