The Great Special Sale of Fine Black Imported Roubaix Dress Voiles Starts Thursday morning.

We wish to call your special attention to the quality of dress goods we are going to sell during this Great Special Sale, which starts Thursday morning. Cheap, trashy volles can be had at all times, but not the quality of goods we are going to sell. The votles to be sold are a fine imported fabric from Roubaix, France. The very name alone, "Roubaix", represents one of the greatest manufacturing centers of really fine dress voiles in the world. They have never been surpassed for quality or beauty of texture, combined with strength and durability. We would be pleased to show you Roubaix volles and give you samples for comparison, and explain to you wherein Roubaix voiles do not ose their crisp touch or dust resisting qualities after a few times being worn, as is the case with many voiles. Note carefully each reduction below. Then come early Thursday morning. On sale at the following special prices until surplus stock is sold.

Fortune of Nicholas Creede Awaits His Adopted Daughter.

WHEREABOUTS OF GIRL MYSTERY

Romantic Career of the Miner Who Gave His Name to a Colorado Town and a Portune to a Friend's Child.

A singular legal contest is being fought for a fortune of $1,500,000. This fortune will belong to Dorothy Edith Creede, a pretty little girl in her teens, if her side establishes its case. And just at the critical moment, when her

... rounder of the fortune was Nicholas Creede, the famous old miner who has given his name to Creede, Colo. He beggn his adventurous life as a lieutenant in a volunteer company of Indian fighters, which fought in the Pawnee wars. Then he tramped the hills as a prospector, footsore and often starving, until he struck a rich silver lode in a most barren place. In plous memory of the Israelites' wanderings in the wilderness he named it "The even after he sold it for $70,000. At this perfod his devoted wife used to help him with the pick and load down the "jacks." His next great find was the "Amethyst" mine, which brought him millions and for a time paid dividends of $60,000 a month, He also owned one-third of the town of Creede, Colo.

Then he retired from the mining business and settled down to spend his fortune in a palatial though somewhat garish resihowever, for he had separated from the devoted wife of his struggling years, and the fact preyed on his mind.

An Adopted Daughter.

Because he felt lonely and miserable in his old age and in need of somebody to love, he adopted the little girl, Dorothy Edith Creede, who is now the center of interest. She was the daughter of a woman who has led an almost incredibly romantic and checkered career. She was born in Fan Francisco of very poor parents, and was living in great misery when her beauty and grace attracted the attention of Mrs. Scott, the kindly widow of a rich warehouse owner, who formally adopted her. The girl then took the name of Edith She attended for a brief time Scott. Field's seminary, where her beauty, her fine contralto voice and her incipient dramatic talent excited admiration.

Then Mrs. Scott married Captain William G. Waters, an eccentric character, and Edith went to live with them. She adopted the name of Waters, and this habit of changing her name from time to time has clung to her throughout her singularly

One day a man from the outside world was driven ashore in a sailing boat in a storm and forced to spend some days on the island. She asked him all sorts of girlthe questions about herself, and he told her that her beauty would excite the admiracion of all America if she appeared on the stage. That decided her to run away,
