A chronological review of a typical independent telephone enterprise is given by the Rochester Times from which the following significant items are taken:

- 1905, October 9-United States Independent Telephone Company officially launched, authorized capital $50,000,000.
- 1905, December 11-U. S. I. "securities" listed on stock exchange, start selling at 80 for bonds and 501/2 for stock.
- 1906, Summer-U. S. I. T. Company failed to sell sufficient bonds and got into financial difficulties in spite of unusually heavy contracts.
- 1906, October-Company borrowed $2.500 .-000 at about 16 per cent. Negotiations originated by George Eastman to sell U. S. I. T. Company to the American_ Telephone and Telegraph Company.
- 1907, January 28-Bell offer formally advertised without names of purchasers, who were denied being Bell men or interests. U. S. I. bonds and stocks turned into Security Trust Company on the Bell offer.
- 1907, February 27 Attorney-General Jackson checked merger by injunction served on Security Trust Company and U. S. I. officials.
- 1907, March 7-Attorney-General Jackson took evidence in Albany on alleged illegal combination in restraint of trade; secured contracts between the Bell agents and U. S. I. men.
- 1907, March 18-Attorney-General Jackson concluded hearing in New York before Referee Joseph A. Lawson.
- 1907, April 1-U. S. I. Company defaulted on bond interest.

The Times might continue its history and tell that the deal was declared off and that a strenuous effort was made in the early summer to sell the bonds to other parties at 40 cents on the dollar.

The unfortunate circumstances which contributed to this notable fiasco, might cause the failure of many a legitimate enterprise, but it was over-capitalization which caused an irreparable loss to many small investors. There is a moral in this history for the promoters of the new Omaha Company which promises to make 6,000 telephones earn fixed charges on $3,000,000 capitalization
