The Proof

The Mosher-Lampman Business College has opened with an attendance greater than other business schools have had, even afterother business schools have had, even after they were several years old. This proves that there is a demand in Omaha and Nebraska for a strictly first-class, high-grado business school—a school that can afford to employ experienced instructors for every department. This school does not believe in student teaching. It is, therefore, attracting the best class of students and has among its enrollment a large number of High School graduates and graduates of literary institutions. If you wish a business training that will fit you for a ffirst-class office position which will command a good salary—a training that will be a stepping-stone to high business positions, you should
