Omaha as a Dairy Market.

It is a little surprising that Omaha, the center of the greatest grain and live stock country on the globe, should have been so tardy in developing its dairy products trade. Prior to 1903 but little attention was paid to this interest, for the development of which Omaha is particularly favored by location, shipping facilities and other natural advantages. When the start on a large scale was made, however, in 1903, Omaha promptly took rank as one of the great dairy centers of the country and is today recognized as the greatest butter market in the country.

In 1904 the butter output of the Omaha factories reached the healthy proportions of 7,500,000 pounds which gave the city the second place in the butter making world. The following year, 1905, the output was increased to 10,000,000 pounds, placing Omaha in the first place and last year, 1906, the production was increased to 12,000,000 pounds, thus retaining for the city its place as the greatest producer of butter in the nation. The average price of butter at wholesale for the last year was 22 cents a pound, making the creamery product for the year worth $2,640,000.

Thus Omaha has come into prominence as a dairy center although the advantages of the city for such purposes were exploited more than thirty years ago. At that time, the nearest creamery was at West Point, about seventy-five miles from Omaha and its output was unequal to the demand. As the city grew the consumption called for millions of pounds of creamery butter each year, most of which was secured from the factories in Iowa, Missouri and at Elgin, Ill. Today Omaha is capturing trade from the creameries in other states of which it was the best customer in years gone by. The trade has been extended to the Pacific coast and as far east as the Mississippi river and south into Kansas.

One of the difficulties of the creamery business in Omaha is the prosperity of the Nebraska farmers. They have their big fields, their enormous crops and their live stock fattening for the markets, so they hesitate to take time for the rather irksome work of milking and hauling cream to the shipping points. However, with the settling up of the state and with the greater attention paid to dairy interests in general, the outlook is promising for a more liberal supply of cream from the Nebraska farms, particularly as the work in Omaha has demonstrated the profitability of this ready-money product of the farm.

The butter-making plants of Omaha are seven in number, all working to their fullest capacity and enlarging their plants and output as rapidly as possible. Nebraska creamery butter ranks with the best in the world and the fact that no process butter is made by the local concerns gives the output a particular prestige on the markets.

The home seeker can find no better opening than a farm in Nebraska with a liberal portion of it devoted to the dairy interests.
