The week just closed was emphatically a lively one. There was just enough variety in the amusements to keep society to a high pitch of enthusiasm all of the time. Ellery's band was at the Auditorium, exceptionally good attractions at the theaters and several fashionable weddings were a few of a long list of good times available. This week is to be a repetition of last for those seeking a whirl of pleasures, but they are of an entirely different variety, everything centers around the Ak-Bar-Ben fentivities.

The red, green and yellow colors are already flying and myriads of incandescent lights festooned from building to building are sending forth in the evenings a blaze of splendor and brilliancy loudly proclaiming the interest felt in the arrival of King Ak-Sar-Ben XIII.

The big electrical parade Wednesday evening will be a popular feature of the festivities and the closing ball at the Colliseum Friday evening will be the notable event of the week. Then an interval of ten days, during which there will be a paipitating indecision on the part of the romen as to what will be the very latest in the line of clothes-then the Horse Show and it will be known definitely what is what.

Country Club.

HEIRS PAID FOR THE JESTS

Romance Smiles Upon a Smilemaker -Draws $5,000 and a Bride.

Enriched $5,000 through his two years' services as story teller and "jester" to the 1 late Abram Brokaw, millionaire plow manufacturer of Bloomington. Ill., Captain ufacturer of Bloomington. III., Conditional Miss Lewis Ljams, 65 years old, married Miss Lewis Louis 48, who was nurse in the household of the eccentric Brokaw while Ijams was story teller.

The marriage, which took place at the home of the bride in Bloomington, is the climax to a case which has attracted interest in central Illinois for more than a Fear.

Abram Brokaw's wife died six years ago and in his ioneliness following her death he ought a companion.

Captain liams, who had served with distinction in the civil war, was Brokaw's cousin, and he had a reputation for wit. In the realization of this, Brokaw asked his cousin to live with him and amuse him. Liams consented and at the time took up his abode with the eccentric millionaire. Miss Lantz was engaged as a nurse for Brokaw.

For two years liams was Brokaw's constant companion. He took his aged relative on long drives when the weather was pleasant, and as they drove through the country liams told story after story of his experiences in the war.

At night Ijams would amuse the old man with tales of early Illinois history. Miss Lantz was a member of many of these story-telling" partles, and she became attached to liams and he to her.

Brokaw, who was 56 years old, died a year ago, leaving an estate worth $1,000,000. ljams expected to be remembered in the will ,and his disappointment was great when the document was read and he was not even mentioned. He immediately sued the estate for $10,000, setting forth in his petition that his work as "story-teller and fester" for Brokaw had taken him away from other employment. The trial of the case attracted much attention. It lasted al days, and the Brokaw berth in the Pullman car. In this values was also the manuscript of a book which Miss O'Brien expected to publish in the near future. She had further misfortune in the way of train connections and nocidents. It took her eight days to get from a point in Montana to Omaha. At one place the treatle over a deep gorge had been partly burned. The train arrived at this trestle at midnight and the passengers had to crawl across the tottering structure over the smouldering timbers to get to a train which waited
