IN THE FORUM OF THE C. P.

British Traveler Takes Exception to Federal Building Clock.

REMINDS HIM OF AN IDOL

He Spends Some Time Gazing at and Pondering on the Beastly Strange Affair in the Tower.

A world wonder has been discovered in Omaha by a globe trotter. It is nothing less than the clock which stands on the top of the federal building tower. James X. Allwyn of Manchester, England, is the man who made the discovery. Mr. Allwyn stopped a day in Omaha Thursday in the course of a globe circling tour. "You have certainly a bustling city here and a city that I positively like," said Mr. Allwyn. "And after a tram ride I don't need to look at the census figures to know it is growing very rapidly. "But, I say, what could have possessed your Uncle Sam to build such a puzzling clock on his handsome, noble building. When me first struck the object I didn't know what it was. I'd seen things that looked much like it in Burma, but they were used as idols and in Christian Omaha I knew there could be no Burmese sect. "All the time I was thinking of this I was only about a square away from the thing. Finally a gentleman came along and I asked him what the thing was. He looked at me sharp. My word, he thought I was crazy. I fawned. He said something about, 'what are you giving us,' or some such thing, and then he told me it was a clock. "Well, I examined it more closely then, and I saw it was a clock. At any rate it bore a striking resemblance to a clock. The circumference of the dial I found, on closer inspection, was divided into twelve equal parts. But I could see no hands on the dial and I had never heard of a clock of the dial kind, without hands. "By that time I was interested and I secured a pair of field glasses. Ah, then I discovered that there were hands upon the dial. "But, really you know, it is the most peculiar clock I have seen. The person who designed it must have aimed to make a dial from which the time could not be told. The twelve figures on the dial extend more than one-third way across the radius of the dial and, to complicate matters further, there is an additional mark at the quarter points. The best dial has no marks at all upon it. We tell time not by looking what figure the hands are pointing at, but by noting the position of the hands on the dial. "If the clock remains in position for some centuries, future people will think it was used as an idol or something of that sort, you know. They would never dream it was a clock."

"It has been thirteen years since a razor touched my face," declared Constable G. W. Church, thoughtfully combing a bushy growth on his chin with his fingers. "That was during the celebrated campaign between Tom Majors and Holcomb for the governorship. Before that time I had always been beardless. Just before election I made a fool bet with Jim Wheeler, the terms of which were that I would not shave for a year if Holcomb won. He agreed to raise whiskers for the same length of time in case Majors was successful. Holcomb won and I kept my bet. At the end of the year I had a nice, heavy growth on my face and I liked it so well I haven't shaved since. "Whiskers are a good thing for an officer of the law to have, anyway. They are good to hide behind when an irate woman comes out of the house with a shotgun and threatens to blow your head off if you levy a writ of replevin on her pot ducks. Some people look better with their faces covered with a shield of hair and I don't suppose I will ever have any use for a razor again."

Carl Reiter has a new story along the lines at which he is so good. Two Europeans, with their wives, were returning from the theater one evening on the Harney street car line. When Thirty-third and Cuming streets were reached a slight accident happened from a collision, in which both wives were hurt. Meeting a short time afterward, one man said to his friend: "How did you come out with the street car company?" asked like. "Oh, fine; I got $500," replied Jake. "What," said Ike, "only $500. Why, I got $1,000 and my wife was hurt no worse than yours."

LAST NIGHT AT THE THEATERS

Leo Ditrichstein and Company in a Capital Farce at the Boyd.
Leo Ditrichstein and company in "Before and After," a farce-comedy in three acts, by Mr. Ditrichstein, with the Wagonwheel-Kemper company, at the Boyd theater. The cast: Dr. George Page.....Mr. Leo Ditrichstein Dr. Philip Latham.....Mr. Edmund Elliot Colonel Larivette.....Edmund Durant James Jeffroy.....Arthur Beattie Edgar Driscoll.....John Arthur Anthony Mrs. Page.....Hazel Chapple Mrs. Latham.....Miss Kenyon Bishop Odette DeVere.....Nellie Butler Mrs. Taylor.....Madeline Sorel
A Leo Ditrichstein farce is always a delight. His compounds are delicately done and accurately proportioned, so that they never run to an excess of anything, except laughter. They have just the flavor needed, and do not give a bad taste, either "before or after." In his newest he has used old material, but has done it over so that it is a piece with his other productions. And it is enjoyable from the very first. Dr. George Page is a sober-minded professional gentleman who is building up a desirable practice among the women of New York. He is somewhat inclined to be morose. His friend, Dr. Latham, is also a practitioner of excellent standing, but of an investigating turn of mind. Dr. Latham invents a powder that is to effect a change in the disposition of whoever happens to take it, making him merry and "amiable." No experiments on Dr. Page secretly, with the result that the doctor gets gay with the wife of a French colonel, who demands satisfaction. In the of a duel, the colonel proposes to subject Dr. Page's wife to just such an exhibition of amiability as Dr. Page gave with the colonel's wife. In this crisis Dr. Latham proposes the expedient of substituting an employer for Mrs. Page. He goes out to employ a female detective for the purpose, when Dr. Page conceives the brilliant idea of securing the services of an actress who visits his office for professional advice. The actress has a friend who passes as her mother, and with the newly acquired mother-in-law and wife Dr. Page sets out for Saratoga, having first induced his own wife to go to White Sulphur Springs. Just as he seems to have all going well at Saratoga, the real Mrs. Page turns up, and the close of the second act is one of his most ludicrous situations ever offered. The third act is devoted to straightening out the numerous complications that have followed in the wake of the "Sunny Jim" powder.

Mr. Ditrichstein is a comedian of proved ability and gets a lot of fun out of his role as Dr. Page. In the second act, which is free from the influence of "Sunny Jim," he presents a lifelike picture of the late Richard Mansfield, copying his personal appearance and manner of conversing exactly. He shows his extreme cleverness in many ways. In his support he is fortunate, and Mr. Durand, as the first-act, renchman is also a hit.
All in all, the work of the company is marked with a finish that is as dainty as it is pleasing. The staging is artistic and appropriate and the whole is well worth seeing. It will continue at the Boyd the rest of the week, with a matinee on Saturday afternoon.
