ROMANCE BURNED IN FIRE

Started in a Coal Mine by Rejected Sutor, It Has Burned Forty Years. On Paint creek, about twenty miles above Charleston, W. Va., near the station at Standard, a coal mine fire is raging—a fire about the origin of which an interesting romance is woven. At night the mountaineer in which the mine is located is ablaze with a weird play of light; by day a column of smoke ascends like a monument. In truth, the mountain is aflame, an unquenchable fire, as those who have already lost $20,000 in the vain attempt to smother it will testify. In the late '40's of the last century the Kanawha Coal and Oil company was organized for the purpose of producing oil from the canal coal found in the mountains divided by Paint creek. The vein located was a comparatively thin one, lying in the heart of a thick seam of the bituminous coal. The company was busy with its operations when the civil war broke out, but continued to work for some time thereafter. The superintendent was a blunt old Englishman named Gordon, who had a handsome daughter, Rowena, who was the delight of her father's heart and the despair of the young men of the neighborhood. There was the usual spurning and springing, with the usual final selection of one man and the inevitable preparations for the wedding. The lucky man was one Adkins, a native of the mountains, a strapping young fellow, who had won the father's favor as a workman even before he won the daughter's esteem as a lover. Thus the course of true love had seemed to run smoothly but the war came and the Paint creek section was as badly torn by opposing factions as any other small part of the entire country. The natives were of the south, while most of those who had come to work in the mines were union men. Of the latter was old man Gordon, while Adkins was a regular breasting son of Dixie. After several stormy interviews Adkins was forbidden to enter the Gordon home, and Rowena was ordered not to see him. He enlisted in the confederate army and marched out with Wise on his famous retreat up the valley. This was in the spring of 1861. In the autumn he returned home on a furlough and sought to renew amicable relations with the Gordons, but was repulsed by both father and daughter. It is said that in a spirit of revenge he set fire to the drum house at the mouth of the mine. The fire was communicated to the rich vein of canal coal inside, and, obtaining a good hold, has been burning ever since. Adkins returned to his regiment and was killed in battle. The Gordons left the country soon after, and their subsequent history is not known here. That is the romantic version. The prosaic one is that fire was communicated to the mine by a forest fire that raged furiously in October, 1861. Certain it is that the mine began to burn at that time and has been burning since. In the late '80's a company was formed by Charleston men to extinguish the fire and reopen the mine, but after spending $20,000 in a vain attempt the enterprise was abandoned. It is probable that the fire will be allowed to burn until the entire vein of coal is consumed. Often, for years at a time, the fire cannot be seen, but there is always something about the locality to bear witness to its presence. Sometimes it is smoke, sometimes steam. In wet weather there is always a vapor rising from above the mine. In winter snow melts as rapidly as it falls on the particular spot, while the ground around is white. In the springs vegetation appears earlier where the earth is warm from this underlying heat. Of late it has been burning visibly at night, the extent being perhaps 100 yards along the face of the mountain. —Baltimore Sun. MARVELOUS LEAP FOR LIFE The Baron Munchausen of Grand Canyon Falls Of His Daily Stunt. Jim Hance, the Baron Munchausen of the Grand Canyon of Arizona, was sitting on the porch of the El Tovar one day, retelling his marvelous adventures to a party of gaping tourists. Jim has lived on the rim of the canyon for thirty years, and he has been riding about the edge of one of them gorges ever looking down 3,500 feet below to nothing but jagged rocks. "Oh, Mr. Hance," broke in a sweet young thing, "do you ever fall over?" "Once," Hance replied, "only once. It was this way: I was riding along by a chain 400 feet deep. My mule was an old circus mule, and I careless like, began to whistle 'Turkey in the Straw.' You see, that mule had been trained to dance in the circus to that tune, and she began to dance right there on the edge. The natural result was that we both went over the edge, plumb down 400 feet to the sharp and cruel rocks. "How did you escape?" "Oh," replied Hance, nonchalantly, "I kept my wits about me. When we was about twenty-five feet from the bottom, after falling 250 feet, I picked out a nice smooth spot and jumped off the mule. I landed on my feet, safe and sound." "But the mule?" "Oh, the mule! Why, I gathered up what was left of the mule and put it in my lunch basket and gave it a Christian burial." —Saturday Evening Post.
