A SIMPLE, LOGICAL REASON WHY HARTMAN CAN UNDERSELL THEM ALL!

It is no more a difficult matter for Hartman to undersell than it is for water to flow down stream. No other home furnishing concern in the country has a selling capacity equal to that of the great Hartman organization with its 22 great stores—and upon this fact hinges our ability to undersell.

The volume of business done by the Hartman chain of stores is larger than that of any other store, combination of stores, or syndicate in America—none excepted. By conducting the most extensive business of its kind it must necessarily follow that its purchasing power is correspondingly greater.

Greater selling capacity means greater buying power for us, consequently lower prices—these are the simple, logical reasons for Hartman's supremacy in the giving of great values—the reason we can, and do, undersell every other home furnishing concern in this city.

FEW HEART TO HEART TALKS

Waiter Kicks Because People Don't Know What They Want.

HARDSHIP OF LIFE IN NEW YORK

Man Whose Life Has Been Spent There Says Omaha is Much Better at Half the Price.

"Strange," said the head waiter of one of Omaha's swell cafes, as he relaxed and dropped into a reminiscent mood, "that people don't know what they want when they come into a cafe to eat. When they go into a clothing store they know whether they wish to buy an overcoat or a pair of suspenders; when they go into a department store they usually know whether they are going there to buy a piano or a 'fishy bear,' but when they come in here they are completely at sea. Few people who come in here have the slightest idea what they want. Two men come in and sit down at the table. A waiter approaches them and they spar for time by asking for a bill of fare, and the more they study it the more perplexed they usually become. They study the bill of fare ten minutes, while the waiter retires a respectable distance and waits for a hunch. Finally, the observing waiter mistakenly imagines he sees a gleam of intelligence flash across one of their faces and he approaches them again. They gaze into each others' faces with a vacant, imbecile expression and one says, 'what are you going to eat?'"

"Hanged if I know," replies the other.

"One of them finally thinks of some delicacy he once enjoyed in the long ago and is about to order it, when the waiter informs him it is out of season for that particular dish. He is disappointed and mutters something about him service. After stalling around for fifteen minutes without ordering, they finally concede to the waiter that they are pressed for time and want something that can be gotten in a hurry. I usually suggest roast beef and boiled potatoes, and they say in unison, 'that's all right for me.'"

"I'm tired of this business, and would like to get into some line where people know what they want."

"Then don't go into the saloon business," interposed a well known bartender. "None of my customers knows what he wants. They line up in front of the bar and when I ask them what they want they assume an idiotic expression and begin conversation like this:

"Well what are you taking?"

"I'll take what you do."

"So will I."

"I'll take lemonade."

"No lemonade goes here."

"Gimme a beer."

"I'll take a little skey."

"Well, gimme the same."

"Me, too."

"Give us all skey."

"Let's go into the undertaking business," said the waiter. "The dead ones are the only ones who know what they want and never chew the rag."

In the bull pen at the county jail a Chicago man, who forgot to leave his name and address, discovered the man who a year ago at the Chicago Horse Show ran off with his $55 overcoat.

Several days ago the Chicagoan appeared at the jail and asked to see one of the prisoners. The prisoner was pointed out to him and this conversation took place:

"Your name is John Jones, isn't it?"

"It is," replied the prisoner.

"Just a year ago at the Chicago Horse Show I gave you my overcoat to hold and when I got back you had disappeared, and I haven't seen either you or the coat until today. Where is my coat?"

"I am not the man," declared the prisoner.

"You are," said the Chicagoan.

Here the conversation ended. The Chicagoan explained he had taken off his overcoat at the show because he wanted to go into the ring. He gave it to one of the attendants, but when he returned the attendant had disappeared. Happening to be in Omaha he learned the man was in jail and hoping to find out what had become of the garment he called on the man. In spite of the prisoner's denial he still maintained he had at last found the culprit.

Walter J. Walker, a specialty salesman from New York, has been in the city during the week, a guest at the Home hotel. This is Mr. Walker's first trip west, having lived all his life in New York City.

"I have enjoyed my week in Omaha," he said, "and I'd like to live here. I like New York, but it's getting to be a difficult thing for a man on a salary to live there unless he lives up in the sixteenth story of a building in two or three rooms. Strangers have spotted New York for ordinary people who live there. They come there from the four corners of the earth to blow their money. Fitting millionaires are not the only fools who come there to dump off their surplus coin. They come from Texas, Colorado and all over the west and do foolish things with their money. They go into a restaurant and give the head waiter a ten cent note to reserve a table for them, they order expensive meals and tip the waiter five or more and all that makes it hard for the ordinary man."

"Just before I left New York I went into a cafe and after sitting at the table ten minutes a waiter designed to approach me. I started to give him a dollar tip before he took my order. He turned up his nose at it and walked away."

"Any man is better off in Omaha on $25 a week than he is in New York on $60. He will have more friends, breathe purer air and save more money in Omaha. You've got a pretty, thriving city and I'm both surprised and impressed with Omaha."

Judge Returns from Duluth, Where He Acted for Judge Page Morris.

Judge W. H. Munger has returned from Duluth, where he held court for United States Judge Page Morris. Judge Munger will preside at the opening terms of the federal courts to convene in Omaha Monday.

Several additional suits for violation of the twenty-eight hour law in the matter of the shipment of live stock have been brought in the United States district court by the United States against the United Pacific Railroad company. ### TIMOTHY HAY IS PRECIOUS Little of It For Sale in Omaha at Any Price Just at Present.

"Cut Rate Meals During the Horse Show" would be an appropriate sign for the wholesale and retail dealers in hay to hang in their windows, since receiving the prices offered in Chicago for hay.

While No. 1 Timothy hay is quoted at $11 per ton in Chicago, the highest price ever quoted at this season of the year, Omaha dealers are selling what little they have on hand for $11 to $11.50 per ton. But there is little Timothy hay for sale, dealers declaring there is not enough to make a market price. Farmers who had Timothy to cut this year are holding it in and very little will be marketed. As the farmer is eating better food than ever in his rural home in Nebraska, he is serving better food to his horses. Wild hay is abundant in Omaha

AGED WOMAN SLEEPS OUT

Octogenarian Gets Lost and Makes Her Bed in Leaves on Ground.

At sunrise Friday morning Mrs. Josie Novak, a woman 89 years of age, was found sleeping under the trees in John Power's yard at 1913 South Tenth street. She had made her bed of dead leaves and grass and was sleeping peacefully, apparently oblivious to the cold, damp early morning air. She was taken to the police station in the patrol wagon, but as she could not speak a word of English, it was some time before her identity was fixed. Tony Vanous arrived and found the old woman could converse fluently in the Bohemian language. It was learned she is the mother of Mrs. Carrie Spicka, at whose residence she has been living, at Tenth and Center streets, on the Overland Limited train. Mrs. Spicka says her mother retired about 3 o'clock Thursday night, but Friday morning the family was surprised to find she was not in her room. She had taken a notion to go to a neighbor's house and had not returned.

HEAVIES' TOURIST TRAVEL

Crusade to the Pacific Coast This Fall Surpasses All Records.

William Brayden, 23 years old, and dean of the Pullman porters, who works through Omaha on the Overland Limited train, is authority for the statement that travel toward the Pacific coast exceeds that of any previous fall in his recollection. Mr. Brayden's recollection goes back to the days before the Overland Limited had come into existence.

"It utterly is a right smash of travel," said Mr. Brayden, as he stood at the steps of his car. He helped a passenger aboard and then repeated his statement with emphasis. "I don't recollect any year when so many people seemed to be making for the warm climates of the west, and they're going earlier than they gen-
