THRILLING STORY OF AN OLD LAW

Pertlous Journey of an Appropriation Through Shoals of Red Tape to the Safe Harbor of Actunl Service.

"The things these children of ours do seach us," said Mrs. Providem, "and our discovery of the sources from which they get their information is astonishing. My son was poring over a nice looking bound book in green the other evening, so absorbed that I finally asked him what was so interesting. He laughed and answered, The remantle story of The Office of Experiment Stations of the United States Department of Agriculture, mother, and when I get through with it I will let you read It as a special favor. It is chuck full of interesting short stories, and some longer ones. For example, how one Senator Adams, realizing that we had all kinds of aducation except that concerning how to grow things, the fundamental work of the world, asked our law makers to approve of a plan to use, out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the complete endowment and maintenance of agricultural experiment stations, the sum of $5,000 for each station, with an annual increase of $2,000 a year. This story is called "The Adams' Act,' and is a scrial which, with its consequences, runs through the book. In the first number the Adams' act was passed, and there was general refolding among all the professors and students that they could do a lot more interesting work which they could not do before because they did not have equipment, or seed, or land, or the means to cultivate it.

Plot Gets Interesting. Then there was gnashing of teeth, for in before this story is finished by putting scipresent an amendment to the agricultural to use their share or a part of it. appropriation bill interpreting the act and "Now, that's my story, mother, and here The bill was so long passing that it gave run through and take its turn in growing the stations just two days to arrange for as has the study of agriculture, the grow-spending the money, but they hustled the ing of foods.
