Try HAYDEN'S First

there is never any violent contrast in the colors and the heavy black braid which was worn so much last winter has disappeared.

Some of the waistcoats are made without any finish more than a heading of some contrasting tint. Very few of the fancy waistcoats have collars.

For evening wear the simple white duck, exquisitely fine and costing as much as $20 at the more expensive establishments, is still the appropriate garment. Some of the French manufacturers are sending over white linen waistcoats that look as if they were made of satin brocade, so fine is the linen.

So far none of these has been made up by the local tailors. They are still smart because few of them are worn, although it is doubtful if they are really as appropriate for evening wear as the plain white duck, and they are intended only for very young men.

If the classic elements of full evening dress are not to be tampered with there is still the appropriate garment. Some of the French manufacturers are sending over white linen waistcoats that look as if they were made of satin brocade, so fine is the linen.

SOBRIETY IN WAISTCOATS

Men No More to Indulge in a Riot of Color.

FINE LINEN FOR EVENING DRESS

Tans and Grays Take the Place of the Reds, Purples and Greens—Much Color Permitted with the Dinner Coat Only.

The riot of color that has recently been a decorative feature of man's dress will soon be a thing of the past. Already more sober tones are seen among men who dress with regard to the latest fashions.

There has never been a time when the man who was most inconspicuously dressed was not also the best dressed. Yet the lure of beautiful colors has sometimes proved irresistible, and careful dressers indulged in the reds, purples and greens that have been put on the market in recent years.

These colors furnished opportunities for the careful matching which has recently been a feature of modish dress. The man who could carry through successfully a color scheme which had its foundation in a purple tie and ran through the other tints of the same color, such as a mauve shirt and waistcoat and purple silk socks, was so sorely tempted that he sometimes forgot the highest principles of correct dress.

In the recent rage for color it seemed at times as if the older idea might have been lost sight of altogether. Now that more sober ideas of color prevail a man will not find the same opportunity to forget the principle that the best dressed persons are those who attract least attention.

This theory is best proved by the unalterable character of evening dress. It has never varied from black and white whatsoever attempts may have been made to introduce color. Nobody would urge black and white for daily wear, but its permanence as the most formal dress is proof that elegance and distinction abide in simplicity.

No garment reflects more strongly the new tendency toward simplicity than the waistcoat. For day wear the colored stripes, the flamboyant white and black checks and the vivid yellows and greens are seen no more.

Tans, and rather dark at that, grays of a more somber hue than has been worn in years, dark blues with a barely distinguishable red check and green so dark as to be almost black—these are the colors for waistcoats this year.

Men who stick to linen and duck waistcoats even in the winter may still wear white, which is never bad style. Combinations made with these waistcoats will be seen most necessarily in very sober combinations if they are not to violate the present rule of simple dressing in the matter of color.

For variety this season to offset the simplicity in colors is found in the finish. In the newer waistcoats are made up in two shades of brown, for instance.

for them. They become charges on the public, and it is hardly fair that the Philippines should be called upon to entirely support such waifs.

One of the most commendable things the veteran army of the Philippines has done since his organization is the disposition it has shown to find and care for such of these children as are left in straitened circumstances by its members. In finding homes for them the members of the organization have had many delicate questions to settle, and they have invariably made good disposition of such of the children as came within the scope of their rules. But in caring for this particular class, there have been found children no less worthy, but not entitled to consideration from the organization because their fathers did not happen to be members thereof. Eighty post is endeavoring to find a remedy for this state of affairs and has devised a scheme for the formation of an association of prominent men who shall administer a trust fund to be gathered together for this purpose—Mantia America.
