The Massachusetts commission on industrial and technical education has been compiling statistics on the subject and in a recent report estimated that there are 25,000 school children in the Bay state who are wasting two valuable years. These were the children who left school at 14 years of age. Recently the Massachusetts legislature, facing the problem of retaining such children longer under educational influences—and making them more efficient economic units, passed a law to encourage the establishment of public trade schools in municipalities, as a result of which auch a school has been started in Lowell and other manufacturing centers are planning schools.

This is the plan of one state to remedy what is believed to be a grave defect in our public educational system, but this remedy touches a comparatively small area merely. The seriousness of the situation is pointed out by Charles F. Warner, principal of the Mechanics Arts High school of Suringsfield Mechanics Arts High school of Suringsfield Mechanics Arts High school of Suringsfield Mechanics are living at the regular monthly social given by Mazie City council Min. and Mrs. Gabrio, nee Ethel Crumrine.

the Omaha agent, and also in honor of the what is believed to be a grave defect in cipal of the Mechanics Arts High school of Springfield, Mass., in the current number of Charities. He says:

"There is something decidedly wrong in a social system which permits large numbers of children to leave school and waste from two to four years of adolescence in unskilled labor for a wage so small that it can claim no consideration in comparison with the loss of opportunity that such children experience, not to speak of the physical, mental and moral damage that they may suffer. It is the most formative perfod of their lives if rightly employed. And it may be, and ometimes doubtless is well employed in work; for work may be made educationally profitable. But it is not so with the great majority of children employed in our shops and factories and department stores. The work they do yields them hardly more than the bare necessities of life. Sometimes it may contribute a portion to the support of the family.

"But for the child worker in most instances there is no true vocational quality in the work, no development of knowledge or skill as a future personal asset, no enlargement of capacity as a producer, no extension of the outlook upon life. It is a great waste of living power for a mere pittance. "If the public schools are to find their full measure of usefulness in our industrial, commercial, money-making, democratic cities, they must reach those children much more effectively than they do. The industries need the skillful hand and trained intelligence, the state needs to develop the resources that are to be found in the latent productive abilities of her children, the nation needs their loyalty as true citizens: but more than all, every child in this country has a right to enjoy the privileges and opportunities of life in a democracy. He should have the chance to develop his powers to their best efficiency, to take a large part in the productive effort of his time and to have his just share in the products of his own thought and labor.

"The adequacy of the public schools, as they are now carried on, to meet fully the greatest educational need of our times is generally admitted; but it may be questioned whether the influences that have brought about the development of a onesided system of education, strong in the literary and scientific elements, but weak and ineffective in vocational aims and results, are fully understood, whether the ultimate results upon the productive indus- gists. tries and upon commerce of a continuance of such a scheme of education are generally appreciated, and whether the responsibility of state and municipal authorities in the matter is recognized."

Mr. Switzler on Mr. Bryan. OMAHA, Nov. 16-To the Editor of Bee: Mr. Switzjer's indictment of Mr. Bryan's idea of organization of the "democratic party," that gives the latter a mark of a great name to conjure with, was strong and good. It ought to have included a statement of the democratic (?) vote for Alten B. Parker, the only really strong man of presidential size who has led the party since Hill and Cleveland, The way Mr. Bryan's party was organized then to put votes into the Roosevelt box in this state was a caution to all. I hope Mr. Switzler may return to the record of Mr. Bryan's highly organized party and show as he can so well do, and give an exhibit of this eminent man's promises as an organizer of ruin and defeat of a once great national party, in emptying state legislatures of democrats since 1896 and executive chairs of democratic governors in the northern part of the union, with the result of changing the senate from a democratic majority to a republican majority of twothirds, and the house to about the same

It would seem to be most valuable whenever any contagion threatens the young.

I read that it is proving effective over much of the civilized world, even that cities in Chill and Argentina find it useful The state of Massachusetts, through the last legislature, made it possible for every school throughout the state, appointments of county school inspectors being made for

The physical stumbling block hindering the development of a child may often not be recognized by the parent. Recently a disease unfitting a 14-year-old boy for the exercise and play usually so essential to growth, was first recognized by the school inspector and reported to the surprised parent, who was a physician. If in medical inspection of schools is a work so valuable both to the individual and the public generally, can we do better than to secure it for our city? MEDICUS.
