Following is the full text of his remarks We have met to exercise the right of the majority to organize the house of repmanuatives, and we must face the responability that goes with the privilege. It has een a decade since the republican party ansumed responsibility for legislation and for execution of laws, and in first ten years we have seen such prosperity as never before bleased any nation. The American people are richer by many billions of dollars than they were ten years ago, and their wealth, as represented by income from work and wage is more equitably distributed than ever before. This has been the triumph of a people's government under laws inspired by the people and worked out and executed by the people's re, resentatives. But it has been said: 'Boast not thyself of tomorrow, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

Facing Grave Responsibility.

We must face the responsibility for government without regard to the past. The recent shock to business that has arrested commerce admonishes us to approach our task with soberness and course, for we are to be judged by the work of the present, not by the record of the past. The Fifty-ninth congress had a proligious amount of work put before it, but complished more in the way of legisation than its predecessors in many years, I believe, and it is my opinion that the the corn field again and the many willing great majority of the people believo with that that work was necessary and eas well done. But we are not going to secure perfection in legislation and administration in a duy. Law is not alone latter; It is in the spirit of the people. In many so-called republics there the shadow of constitutional authority without the substance of either constitu-
