INSIDE OF GREAT CRUSADE

Alfred Cornish Shows Up World-Herald's Fight on Chief.

OBJECTS TO BEING MADE A TOOL

Repudiates in Toto Magazine's Interview Which the Aggravated Newspaper Puts into His Mouth for Its Use.

Alfred Cornish, dealer in harness and leather goods at 1236 Farnam street, and one of the best known business men in Omaha, objects to being made a tool by the World-Herald in its personal campaign against Chief of Police Donahue.

In that paper of Sunday Mr. Cornish is made to say that "the police stand in with crooks and other protection to criminals," and a lot of other things. The paper goes on to tell about an alligator handbag which was stolen from Mr. Cornish last summer and of how Mr. Cornish paid $25 to the officer who recovered it for him.

Mr. Cornish came to the office of The Bee and said he would like to make this statement:

"The World-Herald misstates facts and does me great injustice, as well as the police and the chief. In the first place I never talked to or was interviewed by a reporter or representative of the World-Herald on this subject in my life, so the fact is to the World-Herald I never said anything. And to no person did I ever say I thought or knew the police stood in with the crooks. That is positively false in every particular and no man can honestly say I ever uttered such a statement as a slight token for getting the bag back in the next place if I did believe it, it is so silly to think the mere pittance of $25 out any figure whatever in the officer's work. As a matter of fact my handbag was in my possession and if I had not seen fit I could have omitted giving the officer anything. He didn't expect anything. There was nothing in the entire transaction, that could have suggested graft on the part of the police and so far as I know, or have ever said, the police of Omaha are absolutely above and free from graft.

"The World-Herald manufactured that interview for its own use. One day some time ago I was talking with a friend, an insurance man, about how police and detectives recovered stolen property. We were exchanging views on it and commenting on the skill and scheming they had to employ. In the course of the conversation I said that I presumed often the police found it necessary to seem to compromise with a criminal in order to recover stolen articles or effect an arrest. I said this as any man would make such a remark, without giving an intelligent person the slightest room for misconstruing my words or thoughts into such a fabrication as is attributed to me.

"I am a business man and attend strictly to business. I have no time for dabbling in other people's affairs and don't thank anybody for dragging me into a thing of this sort."

CONSIDERABLE IN A NAME Woman Objects to Being Transformed Into the Wife of "John Doe."

"John Doe" as sung in the "Gingerbread Man" opera is a far different character from the sorry looking individual who respond to that name in the cold gray dawn of the "morning after" at the police station. As a rule those who are booked under that cognomen are brought into the station in such a state of intoxication they are "too full for utterance," and in the morning after they accredit themselves with having given themselves that name to the desk sergeant and kept their real name under cover. An exception was taken to the name "John Doe" Sunday when the wife of a man employed on the Douglas street bridge came into the police station and in an excited manner explained that her husband had not come home and that she had learned that he was last seen Saturday night carrying a lantern on the bridge. She was positive in her fears that he had fallen off the bridge and was lost to her forever. After describing her husband in a flattering manner, Jailer Burns gave a knowing wink and brought her spouse out of the cell room, where he had been lodged under the designation of "John Doe No. 1," having been found in a drunken stupor on lower Douglas street.

With a cry of joy at finding her husband in the land of living, the woman embraced him and then demanded to know by what right he was given the name of John Doe, exclaiming indignantly as she put up his bond: "I've lived with him for over twenty years and he never said any such name." Apologies were made to the woman for giving her husband such a non-de-plume and the two marched triumphantly out of the station.

Better and Better To live better and better seems to be the aim of every American family. The effort may be laudable—it certainly is not easy. Hard as the game may be on the players, the coming of death or disaster makes it doubly strenuous. The least that a man so engrossed can do is to make sure that those with whom and for whom he is now spending all, are protected against the want and distress that would follow his death. The best way to ensure this is by means of a policy in
