In the Field of Electricity

Electricity on Railroads.

OWHERE is electricity making greater progress as a motive power than on the railroads converging at New York City. Preliminary to the installation of electric power in its tunnels connecting New Jersey, Manhattan and Long Island, the Pennsylvania railroad is conducting extensive experiments with electric and steam locomotives in the vicinity of Franklinville, N. J. The best makes of both engines have been put through the paces on a long stretch of track. On one run with limited power the electric engine reached a speed of eighty miles an hour. The tests cover the effect of high speed on the road, the force of the engine stroke and the possibility of electric current disintegrating the steel rail. Results have not been announced.

The New York Central is spending $6,000,000 on its new terminal system in New York. Part of this is already being operated by electricity. When the work is completed all trains will be hauled by electric power as far out as Croton—thirty-five miles on the main line, and to North White Plains, twenty-nine miles, on the Harlem division.

In this service the railroad now has thirty-five electric locomotives, which are handling the through express trains to and from Yonkers, where steam locomotives stop, at speeds varying from forty to eighty miles an hour. The company is getting 200 steel motor cars, each seating sixty passengers, to handle its suburban travel.

The New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad, which uses the Grand Central station, is nearly ready to operate its lines by electric power out to Stamford, Conn., thirty-three miles. It is getting for this service thirty-seven-two-ton electric locomotives.

Plans have been prepared by the Erie railroad for electric equipping about 20 miles of its lines running out from Hoboken. It is estimated that this will cost $3,000,000. The company is now equipping its lines out to Greenwood Lake, N. J., thirty-five miles, and also a thirty-four mile section in New York, between Rochester and Avon.

The West Shore is electrifying its forty-two miles between Utica and Syracuse, N. Y., lines by electric power out to Stamford, Conn., thirty-three miles. It is getting for this service thirty-seven-two-ton electric locomotives.

With the elevation of the tracks of the Philadelphia and Reading railway shortly to be undertaken in Philadelphia it is fully believed that the company will install an electric system to operate all its suburban lines. At Washington there is now strong pressure to compel the Pennsylvania and

Baltimore and Ohio railroads to put in an electric system at the new Union Terminal.

Hotel Heated by Current.

The Eagle Hotel, of Grand Rapids, Mich., is the first hotel in this country to be heated by electricity. The first installation was on October 17, 1907, when twenty-seven rooms were equipped with luminous electric radiators. The other rooms in the hotel, including the offices, parlors, cafe, and barber shop, will be electrically heated with the same type of radiators as soon as possible. The electric heat will be controlled from the office as well as the rooms and it is predicted that a careful test that the new source of heat will mean a considerable saving to the proprietor. With electric heat only those rooms occupied need be heated, and the warmth from the luminous radiators is instantaneous. When a guest wants accommodation, the clerk assigns him a room and while he is waiting for the elevator, a turn of the switch starts the radiator and the room is soon warmed. This economy of heat is the greatest feature of the electric installation. The principal advantage of electric heat will be in the fall and spring, or in cold, damp days during the summer. It will not be necessary to keep a steam heating plant running and guests can keep their rooms at any desired temperature.

Electric Roads Praised.

Privy Councillor Wittfeld, expert of the Prussian Railway ministry, who recently took a commission of experts to the United States for the purpose of studying electrical transportation problems, said in an interview, today:

"America's progress in electrical rapid transit since my previous visit there is astonishing—amazing. Not only have the roads for municipal rapid transit been greatly increased, developed and perfected, but electricity is applied more and more to standard gauge roads. It interested me especially to see that the practical Americans are now using almost exclusively the single phase alternating current. The continuous current roads which predominated in my previous visit are now dropping further and further into the background. 'The American roads are built excellently. It is astonishing to see with what simple means the Americans get splendid results, even where money is lacking. We were astonished at the gigantic development of electrical roads in Indiana and the thinly settled states, like Oregon."

Herr Wittfeld further remarked that the visit of the German experts will have practical results. Their observations in the United States will be utilized in electrifying the Berlin and suburban roads. Work on the plans for these improvements has already begun, but will require several years to finish.

A comprehensive report on his American visit is being prepared by Herr Wittfeld for submission to the government.

Strength of Ether Waves.

A correspondent of the electrical world, Mr. Ernest F. Smith, makes an interesting suggestion as to the possibilities of wireless telegraphy. He thinks that if Hertz waves, when generated, should possess sufficient intensity to be easily recognizable at a distance slightly exceeding 500 miles they would travel further without trouble and gain, not lose, in strength beyond that limit. In that case, he said they would probably culminate in a sort of "aplomb" directly opposite the point from which they started. Here is offered not only a practical hint concerning the power requirements of long range service, but also a startling anomaly. There is said to be a chance that higher efficiency might be realized 30,000 or 12,000 miles from a sending station than 500 miles away!

Development in Telegraphy.

The telewriter is an electrical instrument designed to transmit over a distance reproductions of handwriting, drawings, etc. At the transmitter end a pencil is employed to write the message on paper fed into the instrument, and the movement made by the pencil is transformed into semi-rotary motions of two shafts. The movements of these shafts control the current sent to the line wires, and these currents in their turn reproduce the semi-rotary motions of two shafts at the receiver, which motions are finally transformed into a production of the transmitting pencil movement. For exterior services the instruments are connected to the ordinary telephone line. In the case of interior installations a third line is employed for operating the pen-lighter direct, this line being also utilized to operate the exchange indicator. The system is stated to be an unqualified success for both interior and exterior service in the

BILLBOARDS AS NUISANCES

How California Cities Are Moving Energetically Against Offensive Posters.

California reports an inspiring advance in the campaign against offensive posters, billboards, and advertising hoardings in the judicial decision that such objects are nuisances, subject to abatement by the police authorities under the common law. It was argued that anything needlessly offensive to the senses was a nuisance. A soap factory or a pigsty would not be tolerated in close proximity to residences, because of the vile odors which would outrage the sense of smell. A steam crusher or a boiler factory would be similarly forbidden, because of the outrage against the sense of hearing. But the eyes are as precious as the nose or ears, and the sense of sight, the most useful and valuable of all the senses, is as much entitled to the protection against outrage as any other. So it was contended, and it was decided by the judge, that posters or billboards which grossly offended the eye were for that reason nuisances and might be suppressed as such.

That decision seems to be eminently logical and reasonable. If upheld and generally acted upon it will certainly prove effective. The enforcement of the common law against public nuisances by the police powers of a municipality is usually a summary proceeding. There are, of course, other grounds upon which billboards and hoardings might properly be dealt with. Some of those objects are inimical to good morals. Some are obstructions to the highway. Some threaten danger from fire. Some trespass upon light and air. Any of these grounds should be sufficient to insure the removal of the offending structures. But much simpler and more speedy is their condemnation and demolition on the ground that they are common nuisances. The township of South New Brunswick, N. J., which is a city, has slain the billboard monster, and their only weapon was the old-fashioned scythe of taxation. Finding that the not inconsiderable beauties of the countryside were blotted out by glaring signs, they have taxed the signs out of existence, and now are enjoying the charms of nature unalloyed by the ugly presence of the billboard.

Landlord Insists on Babies.

The sign of the stork will probably be placed on the new apartment houses erected by Henry Phipps in Allegheny. These apartments are now ready to open. The price will be within the reach of the poorer people of the city, and one requisite is that all tenants must have children.

The hard and fast rule that obtains in some eastern cities has been violated by Mr. Phipps, who requires that all persons renting of him must be the parents of at least one child. But the larger the family the better. Newly wedded couples will have to wait for some time before they can be enrolled on Mr. Phipps' rent roll—Philadelphia Press.
