Do Clothes Make the Man?

There is an old saying that "IT'S NOT THE CLOTHES THAT MAKE THE MAN," that's very true enough, but well fitting clothes do help to make us look a whole lot better.

There is another old saying, which says "THERE IS MANY AN HONEST HEART BEHIND A RAGGED COAT," of course there is, but a great many of us only see the ragged clothes and forget the honest heart. Good clothes on a good dresser commands respect. It is easily obtained, if you can't pay cash come in and get credit.

STUDY OF HOME ECONOMICS

Feature of Course at State University that is Growing.

HOW SCIENCE HELPS HOME LIFE

Girls Taught Both Principles and Practice of Preparing Clothing and Food and Otherwise "Keeping House."

"My young folks dipped into 'reports of experimental stations' and got me very much interested, and now they come bringing reports of the work of the women state that are really of interest," said Mrs. Provident. "A bulletin issued by the state university, 'Home Economics in Nebraska,' shows what we are doing to start the rising generation in the way of knowing what they grow and eat foods for, beyond the general reasons that have prevailed hitherto, that they were hungry and so they grew and ate the things which tasted best; if they could get them, and just as much of them as they could stow away in that mysterious internal economy of their bodies, which in a dim way they had been taught took charge of it and made it into muscle and heat; but how it was done they had very little idea or very little care until that same internal economy began to 'act up,' as the boys expressed it, when they generally went to the doctor, or mother, and he or she poured in some nauseous stuff, which the said internal economy, rebelling against any more supplies evidently considered particularly revolting, but which they were taught would straighten them out. Either it or the enforced abstinence from food and nature's constant effort to right wrongs generally brought the mysterious working force into subjection again, and they went on as before with more or less lapses until it gave out entirely and there was no more need of food."

Study at the University.

"Now the industrial college of our university starts every girl who may so elect in a course of study that mingles with regular studies as heretofore thought necessary for the proper education of the growing woman, and she is taught her what should be done in home life and how and why. The first year, while they are studying languages, ancient and modern; rhetoric, history, physical training and chemistry, apparently much as I used to do, they are also learning how to design and draft and sew garments with the knowledge they don't simply make a dress or a shirt waist, but they learn the principles of how to fit it to the figure, the art and use in so doing, a study of the material of which it is made, the quality and value; 'application of the principles of art,' the syllabus says, and that means, they tell me, an idea of form, color and fitness for use. In color they study combinations and laws by designing and arranging themselves in special work designed for that purpose. A semester of this, my daughter says a recent pupil there has told her, makes them to some extent practical in the art, the science and the practice of clothing themselves, so that they can use their knowledge and add to it later in life with comfort and pleasure, never feeling helpless in the face of 'nothing to wear.'"

"This overlaps the second semester on a study of foods, what are good and the principles of how to cook them and make them nutritive. The money value also comes in here, as in the sewing, so it is fair to suppose they will know something of what it means to have bread and butter forthcoming every day and with the knowledge an added degree of consideration for the parents who are providing it. Sewing and goods mingle all that second semester just as they do in the home. In the next they learn further of the scientific combinations of foods, their preservation, invalid cookery and a study of dietaries, which means, so I am told, what the farmers call a 'balanced food ration.' It is well that they put invalid cookery before study of dietaries, for if it is true that nine-tenths of our diseases—a new view of the subject which strikes one as very well put, for there is certainly lack of sense when we are sick—are the result of wrong eating, then when they have studied the right kinds and quantities of food to eat there should be no invalids and no invalid cookery as a consequence. But I forget, it is one thing to know what good food is, and another to get them to eat it, they probably will have to practice on themselves and prove their theories by practice a good while before they can make other people take them up and understand invalid cookery."

"All this goes on for the full course of three or four years meanwhile, and during that time they study, and as far as possible practice, for this includes cookery and house practice, and they know something of ventilation, heating, lighting, water supply, domestic service, study of house plans and house furnishings. A large field, the doubter would say, and only theory, but even a study of the theory of housekeeping and home making elevates it to a level with history and mathematics, 'readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetick,' and if undertaken in the proper spirit, gives the prospective homemaker a desire to do things scientifically, artistically and practically."

"And for all this work the university has built a fine new building especially for this department of home economics, which also furnishes a comfortable home for young women while attending. A large field, the doubter would say, and only theory, but even a study of the theory of housekeeping and home making elevates it to a level with history and mathematics, 'readin', 'ritin' and 'rithmetick,' and if undertaken in the proper spirit, gives the prospective homemaker a desire to do things scientifically, artistically and practically."

CHRISTMAS GREENS IN DEMAND
Local Supply Likely to Be Exhausted. So Popular is the Idea, Say Dealers.

With Christmas only ten days off people are beginning to give a thought to the trees and other decorations and the supply of evergreens that seemed so abundant a week ago is rapidly diminishing. All the Christmas trees expected in the local market are here, and it will behoove the purchaser to make their selection before the supply has been picked over any further. Commission men predict that the supply will be entirely cleaned up from the way the trees are going. Holly is fine this year, the leaves being fresh and green and the berries thick and red. It comes chiefly from Delaware and sells for 20 cents a pound. Mistletoe is not in yet, but the first is expected Saturday morning. The ordinary will retail at about 25 cents a pound, and the crown, or better known as the finest, at 40 cents a pound. These oranges are a month earlier this year than usual, so are better matured, which accounts for their quality. Usually the navel are just beginning to arrive at this season and are forced ripe, which is evident in the flavor. Lemons are also cheaper than they have been for a long time, selling from 15 to 25 cents a dozen.

The domestic chestnuts are all gone, except for a few barrels that some of the grocers may still have, and the larger Italian chestnuts are the only things left. These retail at 15 cents a pound. There is also plenty of cider from New York, which retails at 8 cents a gallon. Apples are a little cheaper and are plentiful, the best eating varieties selling for 7 cents a peck.

The quality of the Pianos in this sale make the prices look small, and they are.

Design of case that is beautiful, tones that are the sweetest, action that is the most responsive and longevity that is greater than any others, are some of the reasons why the Pianos in our

SANTA CLAUS TAKES TO ART

Good Saint Nick Adds New Department to His Store.

SHOW WINDOWS DISPLAY IT

Paintings, Drawings, Statuary and Artistic Curios Are on Exhibition in the Retail Christmas Headquarters.

That Santa Claus has added an "art department" at his North Pole headquarters, besides the vast storehouses of chimneys, iron pots and toys, is shown by the pictures and statuary on display in Omaha stores for the holiday season.

Even the calendars reflect the work of finished artists this year and are far superior in every way to the art goods offered in years past. Whole windows of pictures are shown and the manufacturers have new processes which make the copies, selling at reasonable prices, fully as beautiful as the original drawings in ether color, pen and ink or wash. Among these are a vast number of subjects, including Indian heads, western scenes, heads and a large variety of subjects. The famous W. L. Taylor drawing from Longfellow are back on the market again in a new soft brown finish and are selling at reasonable prices. One of the subjects which has been a large seller is "A New Love." This is a child picture, and represents a sleepy little fellow resting on a pile of soft cushions. Drawn close to the sleeping child is a wide-awake looking Teddy bear, where the doll has nestled with children since the toy bears were first created. The doll in the picture rests alone on the cushions for the Teddy bear is the new love of children.

Statuary is very popular. Perfect models of famous masterpieces are shown in many of the stores. It was such a collection of statues which, when assembled in a show window, named resolution condemning the board of directors of the Trenton Industrial Art school for setting the fig leaf fashion.

They object strenuously to spending their hard earned savings for fig leaves. Apollo, Diana, the Greek slave, Diocobolus, Venus, Mercury and other big leaguers in the exclusive model circles, declared that most of them made only a bare living and the weather was so nice, they they are none for the clothing and then the stores are steam heated, windows and all, and the un-labeled stuffed do not suffer any more than stuffed animals on muffs.

The Hercules in one show window declares that he will never wear a fig leaf, and when he heard that the keeper was going to put woolen underwear on him, he said he would break the contract first as he wore it once in the factory and scratched into the feather weight class with Bob Fitzsimmons.
