NOT A THEORY, BUT COLD FACT

Sales Remain Normal Despite Money Crisis, and Conservative Advertising Gets Much Credit for This Condition.

A well written article in a current periodical points out in the sharp, decisive manner of the trained journalist, "Why 1937 is not another 1933." The article, of course, refers to the financial situation. The opening paragraph is as follows: "The 1937 ranks well up with the great panic of 1933. The temporary strain on credit has been as acute as that of 1933, and the market has been as sharp, the fall in stocks has been as pronounced, the scramble for foreign gold has been as desperate and the government's relief methods have been as extraordinary."

Will Not Be Lasting.

While it is true that many industrial stocks suffered a slump, it is interesting to know in what degree various branches of manufacture have suffered, and we believe that such an investigation will prove the effects of the financial crisis have not been far-reaching and will not be lasting. It is obvious that the manufacturers of necessities, such as well known foods which are in great demand—clothing, which is necessary at a change of season; machinery, such as is needed to enable manufacturers to keep the capacity of their plants up to the requirements of orders.

Not Based on Theory.

This article is based on theory, but upon facts and upon actual conditions as shown some weeks ago when the situation was even more acute than at present in the sales of automobiles at the Madison Square Garden show in New York. The total sales for six days aggregated something over $1,500,000, and the number of individual sales was equally large. A surprising record for the week, for the individual retail sales to owners, not agents, was established as shown by the official records, is held by the Olds motor works of Lansing, Mich., makers of the popular Oldsmobile, a firm who are among the pioneers of the industry and whose long experience has made them perhaps more conservative in their methods and their statements than would be possible with a younger manufacturer whose principal object was to exploit their cars.

Stayed in Reasonable Bounds.

It is greatly to the credit of the conservative automobile manufacturers that they have kept their advertising within reasonable limits—confined them to careful, exact and truthful statements—and the remarkable sales at the show were due to the implicit confidence which buyers placed in the sterling make of cars. This article is written, the greatest automobile show ever given in the city of Chicago, and daily reports point to the greater sales, larger attendance and more enthusiastic reception of the 1938 models presented by the various manufacturers. It is well to mention that the gratifying results of the New York show are being continued in Chicago and are being shared by all the well-known makers. Present reports indicate that the Packard, the Oldsmobile, the Thomas, Peerless, Pierce and other leading makes will vie with the Oldsmobile for the honors of the season. Surely the condition which has made these great shows call for such an enormous expenditure of money should prove a remarkable example of the sta-
