McMillen of Denver, who is a guest at the Paxton totel, "but if it was to do over again ; think I can say positively the law would not be passed. It hasn't hurt anyone and it hasn't done anyone any good. The women do not care to vote and most of them have to be coaxed to go to the polls on election day. Of course some of them have to be hired, just like some of the cast their ballots as their husbands or male relatives wish, and so it increases the total vote without materially changing the results. The only women who really care to vote are a few professional female agitators who hold meetings and make stump speeches to empty seats.
