SOCIETY STOPS FOR BREATH

Fashionable Set Resumes Normal Pace After Strenuous Round of Holidays.

Week's Calendar Seems Scant and Prossic Compared with Crowded Schedule of Smart Affairs of Past Fortnight.

A Yule Song.

the willows shiver. Only the aspens quiver, Down where the lonely river Steals away to the sea: Only the hearse rooks crying, Only the low wind eighing

Never a white sail showing. Never a pennon flowing. Never a gold ray glowing. Bright at the dip of the sun; Huddled the leaves are heaping. Lo, there's an end of reaping! And the horned owl is keeping.

Yet there's a holly ember
Bidding the heart remember
Fien in the bleak December
The spirit of hope may rule;
See, as the day grows diminer
With wan and watery shimmer,
Out of the distance glimmer
The fires of yule!

The young college set, around which most of the holiday entertainment centered and that inspired society to join them or inpreparing to take its leave. Saturday evening Mrs. E. W. Nash gave a dancing party party for this particular crowd, as it was chools. Most of them are leaving either today or Monday. A comparison of last week's social calendar with that of this week shows to what extent these young people have enlivened the last ten days.

Dancing parties, theaters, luncheons and teas crowded the calendar, and it is little. short of marvelous how they met all of their engagements. But youthful energy

One of the larger affairs that will doubtless make the holiday season memorable was the subscription dance given on New Year's eve at Chambers.
