why himself and wife should plan to make a trip together to an unannounced destination could not be definitely ascertained, but it is supposed, assuming that Mrs. Hunt is in reality here for a divorce, that the contemplated trip has some connection with an adjustment of their business affairs and property interests.

Mrs. Jarvis Hunt evidently is becoming greatly annoyed by the nature of the stories printed by the newspapers concerning the domestic affairs of herself and husband, for she now treats the reporters with scant courtesy, and tonight positively declined to be interviewed.

"There is nothing say," was her only answer when she was asked if herself and husband did not wish to issue a joint statement through the press for the benefit and information of their friends and acquaintances throughout the country. This closed the interview, for she would say no more.

Mr. Hunt refused to appear or be seen.
