The marshal ordered the half-breed to throw up his hands, but, instead, he dug his spurs into his pony and started to gat away. The marshal pulled the trigger and sent the shot after his fleeing prisoner, but it failed to hring him down, and it was supposed that he had gone back to the reservation.

that he had gone back to the reservation. Tuesday afternoon, two men were working at the race track a short distance from town and came upon the injured half-breed lying on the ground and his horse nowhere in sight. They picked him up and tok him to Kimball, and tried to get him into a room in one of the three hotois, but they all denied him admission. The Catholic priest finally opened his house to the injured man. An examination by a
