TAFT TALKS ON MACAZINES this widesper

Secretary of War is Guest at Banquet of Sphinx Club.

Rapids, according to report from that ORIGIN OF MORAL AWAKENING

Great Questions Due Largely to Work of Periodical Press.

NEW YORK, April 19.-Secretary William H. Taft was entertained at dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria tonight by the Sphinx club, whose guests included men promiin turn entertained the 400 members of the club who are either magazine publishers or advertising managers. The guests share of the entertainment fell chiefly on have been one of the reasons for the autiength the history of the publication business and the development of the modern magazine.

To present day editors the secretary paid some very pretty compliments when he the people could be traced generally to an honest and outspoken press. Though unfortunate conditions existed at times, the secretary said that the progress toward setter things was uninterrupted and that moral throb. Other speakers were William H. McEiros of the Tribune, William Berri of the Brooklyn Standard Union, Arthur Brisbane of the Journal, Dr. Albert Shaw and Robert

Secretary Taft said in part;

The relation between politics and literature was never more close than in the beginnings of the modern newspaper and magazine.

When we compare the magazine in the days of Addison with the modern publication there is much food for thought in the character of the changes which have been wrought and the kind of progress which has been made. What I am discussing is the progress, from the standpoint of the community at large, which has been made in this branch of human activity. Is it not in the extending of useful influence of magazine reading to the masses of the people? Is it not in bringing within the reach of the poorest who read the power of entering the brightest and best of modern literature and art?

This difference between the magazine of a century ago and that of today finds a counterpart and analogy in regard to most of those things which make life enjoyable. In the pursuit of happiness, in point of real living, the man of little meens and the men of great means are much nearer in respect to the comforts they enjoy than they ever were before in the history of the world.

Magazines Sound Warning.

Magazines hold the mirror up to existing conditions of morality and reflect with conditions of morality and reflect with great accuracy the popular changes in this great accuracy the popular changes in this regard. During the last state of the people of the United States that there has been in the discharge of certain fidelity trusts in the conduct of certain stream fidelity trusts in the discharge of certain fidelity trusts, in the conduct of certain enormous business apperations, a clearly distinct element of dishonesty, illegality and disregard of moral principle, and that unless it is checked by public condemnation and protest there is grave danger that the moral foundations of the business of the country will be sapped and degradation and disaster follow. The magazines of this country, through the strikess written on the subject, bave left no doubt where they stand in respect to this moral awakening and have proven to be potent instruments for the preaching of a crusade against the mammos of unrighteousness. The question which now presents itself is, how far real moral progress in our civilization and politics is to be made under the influence of this widespread popular desire for better things.

The moral awakening, however, has been of the utmost benefit to this country, and can be made more so. It certainly has aroused the interest of the people in government and legislation and has made them properly suspicious and properly watchful of the doings of their representatives. It is at the bottom of the strong demand for primary elections and the elimination of that kind of political machinery which so often in the past has defeated the will of the people.

This quickening of the public conscience has directed public attention and public sympathy toward the poor an laboring classes and has aroused men to the necessity for enacting laws which shall protect them and place them on an equality in dealing with their powerful employers.

It has made the public recognize the necessity for the union of labor to enable it to meet on equal terms its corporate and combined employers in respect to the ever-recurring controversy as to the division between capital and labor, of their joint product.

No Attack on Property,

No Attack on Property.

But those who suppose that this movement is to be regarded as an attack upon wealth accumulated through thrift and industry and benest business acumen, or as repudiation of the security of private property and invested capital, are sure to be disappointed in the end, however great accuragement they may receive at first in the expression of popular will.

He is far afield, in my judgment, who supposes that this popularity of the moral issue, if I may use the expression, indicates a desire to depart from the institutions of our fathers to smend the guaranties of life, liberty and property as contained in our constitution, or to reach any other end than equality of all before the law and the promotion of the equality of opportunity in the pursuit of happiness. The people wish to be convinced that the government is bigger and greater than corporate wealth, that they can select servants to represent them who will not yield to those seeking to make themselves exempt from the enforcement of the law and to establish themselves as a privileged class.

They must be satisfied that the laws can be executed, that the government can be carried on in such a way as that the most successful man in the community from a mercantile standpoint, he who has accumulated millions, shall be made to feel that he is amenable to the law and that a violation of it will subject him to its penalty. This movement is still in progress and there is likely to be no backward step.
