10-room modern house except fur-nace, close in, 19th St. boulevard— $3,800.

(A rare chance for you.)

In a certain large addition developed and put on the market by our real estate department runs a creek of water. The city engineering department of Omaha will soon construct a sewer diverting the creek completely. Its the same creek that flows through beautiful Miller park and forms the lake. When this is done the lots through which the creek flows should at once be worth two or three times the present ridiculously low prices we are authorized to quote, $50 each and up. We spent a good deal of money developing the addition and to show its popularity—inside thirty days after we began sales, $3 out of $8 lots were sold, and at prices ranging from $175 to $26 each lot. Thus all were sold except the so-called "creek" lots. We want an offer on the entire bunch. Get out your pencil and figure for yourself. Lots right adjoining those are now selling as high as $26. (Prices have advanced on the non-creek lots since first sale.) See us. Note This—The owner is very aged, lives cast and is anxious to close out all interests away from his home. It's your chance. LONDON, May 31-(Special.)-This week

a Leicester court committed to trial a burglar who has kept the whole place terrorized. His crimes not only baffled the local police, but also an extra force of detectives employed by the municipality at a cost of 14,00) for the express purpose of running him to earth. To the astonishment of every one, he turned out to be one of the most respected citizens, a Sunday school teacher, John Frederick Spencer, the winner of a prize called the "Town Hundred"-being 300 given by the corporation to the most deserving citizen needing financial aid in temporary embarrassment-and who also had been assiduous in calling the attention of the detectives to the fact that he had seen "suspicious persons" loitering about certain localities. The story of Spencer's final capture was full of exciting incidents. Somehow or 2.500 other it had come to the knowledge of Detective-Sergeant Briars of Leicester that the house of a Mr. Stevens, in Hendon road, was to be broken into on a certain night. The detective, accompanied by the owner of the house, walted in the dark for the expected burglar, and they were not disappointed. After working at a pantry window for two hours the cracksman finally effected an entrance. A tremendous fight took place in the darkness between the burglar and detective, Mr. Stevens could render no assistance, being unable to tell in the dark which was friend and which was foe. Finally, after Finding that the game was up, Spencer made a full confession this week. The document is almost as remarkable as the series of crimes themselves.

"A few years ago," says the confession. "I took over a small drapery business; but owing to bad times and other unforeseen circumstances, the business did not pay. I then tried another business, but, owing to the keenness of competition and want

Before he had made this disclosure, he had to a large extent got me into his hands, so that I was not a free agent. I was gradually drawn more and more within his power. "I was practically forced to become one of a gang of burglars and to share their secrets. Even at this time I was completely in their power by reason of the influence which this man had over me and the fear of the consequences if I refused to become one of them. Unfortunately I consented to join them, and from that moment of yielding to temptation I was entirely at their mercy. When they had a thorough hold on me, they said they would train me to become an expert burglar. Immediately afterwards they began to tell me how burglaries were committed and to show me their implaments and how they were used.

Thankful When Captured. "The next step was to take me to a ouse where a burglary had been planned. took no part myself in the burglary, but was told off to keep watch while the gang entered the premises and carried off the valuables. I was now informed by them that I could not withdraw and that I had equally taken part in the robbery with them. I became hardened, desperate, and had not sufficient courage to draw back, although I often longed to do so, especially as my wife was becoming anxous over my frequent and mysterious absences from home. I never found the least ful when at last I was captured, "Before my temptation and fall, I was an earnest worker in the Sunday school and chapel, and I am truly sorry for all the pain and disgrace I have occasioned. After the expiration of my sentence I am determined once more to lead an honest and upright life."

One of the strangest things connected with Spencer's case is that he does not seem to have profited by his burgling experiences. Most of the plunder from not ess than ten "jobs" traced to him has evidently fallen into the hands of the myserious person who seems, in a measure, to have exercised almost hypnotic influence over him.
