UNDERWEAR ON TRIED LINES

Innovation Not So Marked as Some Authorities Indicated.

COMBINATIONS THAT ARE LIKED

Dainty Garments of Sheer Stuffs to Delight the Senses and Add to the Comfort of the Wearer.

Nothing could be more fascinating to the woman who loves dainty things than the display in the underwear department of the local shops. Already made up or in "patterns" ready to make, the assortment of soft, dainty sheer things is fairly bewildering.

There is hardly the pronounced change of style in this season's undergarments that one might have expected from the predictions of the supposed authorities that the kimono effects are going out. As a matter of fact, in such garments as the wide loose kimono sleeve and the easy biased skirt are practical, they are even more generally used than before.

The chemise that has been so popular for several seasons is beginning to find a rival in the combination of three-piece suits. These include the corset cover, drawers and short skirt, the drawers and skirt being ingeniously combined to eliminate all surplus cloth about the waist and hips in compliance with the demand for the slender, straight figure. Devotees to the chemise will be reluctant to give up that very pretty and very comfortable garment, insisting that if made of the fine, sheer materials in which alone it is desirable, there is not sufficient fullness about the waist and hips to make any difference. However, the stout woman can afford no fullness that is not absolutely necessary, and she is creating the demand for the combination garment.

Comfort for Stout Women.
The noticeable modification of the blouse has occasioned a corresponding scantiness in the corset cover, for the stout figure, is equipped with the inner, close-fitting, bust support. Still another boon has been provided the stout woman in the way of a short petticoat. The skirt is in itself nothing new, being the simple close-fitting, gored garment that reaches slightly below the knees, and is worn under the chemise. The innovation comes in the supplying of four wide buttonholes or openings so arranged as to allow the hose supporters to pass through the skirt directly below the lower edge of the corset. Two of these openings are in front and the others at the sides. This prevents any binding and eliminates the bulk of the short skirt over the corset. This arrangement is especially good for women who wear the little union suits. It insures a smooth, close fit of the dress skirt over the hips, necessitating only the top skirt and the one petticoat being worn over the corset. In the more substantial, less expensive garments the openings for the supporters are the bound or faced back evenly with the material of the skirt. In the daintier French garments they are simply wide buttonholes, worked with embroidery thread.

All May Be Pleased.
For women who desire only the dress skirt worn over the corset, these same openings may be made in the flounced petticoat which may be worn underneath. Some of the departments are showing a combination skirt for the stout figure that consists of but one thickness over the hips with scant, gored short skirt or knee-skirt attached just below the corset line to the inner side of the long petticoat. This model has not proven very popular, as the underskirt is likely to bind in walking and affords no particular advantage, as it is permanently attached to the long skirt.

BAGS COME IN MANY FORMS
Taste and Convenience Combine in the Materials and Designs Now Exhibited.

The English word "bag" may mean almost anything made to hold things for convenience of transportation. There is probably a greater variety in size and material in milady's shopping bag than in any of her personal effects. These may be found in all of the new shades. Especially attractive is the Champs Elysees style, which is about twelve inches long and seven inches wide and is unusually convenient, having several compartments, one for the mirror, another for memorandum, another for powder puff and there is even a choice in what one wishes inside the bag. For instance, some of them made especially for tourists have a small manicule set enclosed. The old-fashioned chateleine which fastens to the belt is being revived, perhaps because they really never have gone out because of their usefulness. The newest bag is made of the natural tan leather in the medium size and has the initial of the owner's name in the Old English text burnt in one side of the bag. This is especially smart when a tailor suit and tan gloves are worn. Few of the New York women are without these, and recently when Admiral and Mrs. Schley were visiting in Omaha one of the local firms presented her with one.

As one glances over the array of bags in the shops a noticeable feature is the variety of shades, so that one may match any gown if they wish. The purses graduated in color in the green shades from the delicate seafoam to the deep green of the clover, one in the latter being in the shape of a four-leaf clover. There are also the immense black seal bags and those of the baby alligator, which have been so much in vogue the last season. For those who prefer a fancy portemonnaie there are attractive tooled leather and hand-painted ones.

BRIDE'S NAME FOR MARKING
One of the Customs that Has Come in with Modern Notions and Practices.

Marking the under lingerie with the full given name of the bride is the newest thing for the trousseau. The lettering is done in script in the finest of French embroidery, such as is used on handkerchiefs, and the name is applied in the middle of the front of the chemise, corset cover or night gown. The monogram done in the French is perhaps more popular than this newer fad and likely to remain so, for it is always effective and may be applied to produce the effect of most attractive trimming. Of course the initial of the bride's maiden name is always used, whether alone or in combination with other letters.

SILK STOCKINGS TO MATCH
Shoes Are Patent Leather, but the Hosiery Must Harmonize with the Gown.

Silk hosiery is one of the things most dear to the feminine heart, and silk stockings are given oftener for bride prizes at afternoon parties than anything else, for they are not only attractive but useful and a pardonable luxury. The silks are especially popular, since they must match the gown in color, and the silk does not fade as readily as the lace and cotton. Last year the hosiery and shoes were worn to match the gown, but the innovation this year is to have the hosiery match the gown and black patent leather shoes complete the costume.

FINE GOWNS READY TO WEAR

Stores Offer Dainty, Beautiful and Tempting Things in Great Profusion.

The daintiest and finest of summer frocks may be purchased ready-made nowadays, and they have never been finer or daintier than this season. Gowns for any and all occasions can be bought ready to put on, for the stores make all alterations necessary in every sort of costume from the wedding gown itself to the most intricate dinner gown, the smartest frock for the afternoon garden party and the simplest gingham for house wear. The one piece gown is counted especially good this season, and most of the daintiest summer frocks are so made. All sorts of materials are combined in the lingerie gown, baby Irish, German valenciennes, cluny, linen and soft mulls and batistes are used in a single costume, and the result is frequently exquisite. Lawns and dimities are made up with embroideries and laces. For the wedding gown, the soft satins have been counted smartest this season, but for the June wedding the soft mulls and batistes, the thin nets and thin shimmering silks seem to be preferred. An endless variety of trimmings in appliques, bands, lace, embroidery and novelty by the yard or by the pattern is to be had for this gown.

Some of the very best possibilities for the summer gown are found among the linens, of which there is almost endless variety this season. The bordered materials are especially effective, but these same bordered effects are obtained in even more elaborate costumes by the application of the linen soutache braids or any of the several finer braids and the dyed laces so much used this season. Hand embroidery on these suits is particularly smart. A generous line of these linen gowns is carried by the local stores and unless a woman has excellent taste or can rely upon her dressmaker for these touches that determine the style of a gown, she will do well to inspect the readymade things before buying her materials.

PARASOLS FOR SUMMER GIRLS

Many Kinds, Many Shades, Many Materials for the Fair Ones to Inspect.

A pretty summer parasol has a Grecian design in red and green plaid no more than half an inch in width. It makes a most effective trimming, extending all around the upper edge of the parasol. These and many other things might be suggested to the woman who is getting ready for her summer at the resorts. In the shops may be found extremely smart-looking parasols of pongee, in the natural color with a printed broche border. There are others in pongee of equally good style, with a printed rose border. At this same counter one may find an important novelty—a pale-blue plain parasol trimmed with applied bands and circles of tan leather, which is extremely effective. One of the daintiest is made of white linen with an eyelet embroidery border.

BELTS GIVE SMART EFFECT

Important Accessory to Tailored Suit and Easy to Find to Please.

An important accessory for the tailor suit is the belt, one of the most useful being made of chamouis skin to match the gloves. These are attached to a neat gold buckle which is easily detached, and the belt can be laundered in a short time and kept fresh looking. A more dressy belt is of soft folded leather to match the gown. These come in all of the light shades, as well as the darker ones, champagne being one of the smartest. The plain silk elastic belt is especially becoming and always fit the figure well. The more elaborate of this sort of belt is some times decorated in Dresden designs and also in tiny cut steel designs.

GLOVES COME IN ALL SHADES

Colors to Harmonize with the Gown Are Easy to Obtain in Silk or Kid.

Gloves to match the gown are in high favor and the gown is easily matched in any shade in either the lace kid or the silk. A novelty in the latter are those embroidered in the same shade, that is, just the upper part of the long glove. Most of the brides are choosing the white suede gloves to be worn at the ceremony. Miss, which were in favor with our European sisters, did not have the same popularity on this side and are worn but little. The tan gloves to match the shoes are especially popular with street suits.
