NEW YORK STOCKS AND BONDS

Market is Stagnant Because Traders Are Waiting

CONVENTIONS CAUSE HESITATION

Probable Effect of Cut in Steel Prices and Issue of Unit Pacific Bonds Other Deterrent Factors.

NEW YORK, June 9.—There is not much detail to report of today's stock market.

In the later trading it fell into a dull, listless condition.

Operators seemed to find nothing to do but speculate on the market.

The determination to wait several months before making a move in the market is a general feeling.

The convention period of the great political parties is a general feeling.

The effect of the convention on business as well as on speculation is a general feeling.

Progress among steel men to consider the proposed cut in prices is a general feeling.

On account of the uncertainty over the market of the proposed cut and its influence on the steel industry is a general feeling.

Open opinion is not agreed as to the possibility of a price cut as between the steel industry and the general public.

Additional and additional hesitation among operators is a general feeling.

On the prospect that still further depression of prices is a general feeling.

It is believed that some of the interest in the steel industry is a general feeling.

The market position of the United States steel stock also came in for discussion.

While these stocks have not been conspicuous in the market, they have been marked with a downward movement.
