Firearms in Deep Water.

Chicago is soon to follow the example set by New York's police commissioner in dumping confiscated frearms into deep water. For years the city by the lake has followed the antiquated practice of holding an annual auction of "guns" gathered by the police. The result has been, of course, just what it was in New York—the strong arm gentry and hold-up artists obtained ordnance at a cut rate. Now, Chicago's municipal judges have voted to turn over to the city custodian all contraband dangerous weapons, and they will be consigned to the depths of Lake Michigan. "A good riddiance to bad rubbish" is the verdict of the Windy City newspapers.

ATTACKS OFFICERS OF CONCERN

Declares They Are Voting Themselves Salaries, Expense Money and Commission and Not Building Railroad.

Suit for an accounting of and a rerailway, a concern which has enlisted the depth. Laying aside my knapsack and aid of a large number of small investors stretching out as comfortably as possible, in the building of an electric line from I lay gazing into the cool depths below, Omaha to Hastings, was filed in district court Friday afternoon by John W. Ege, one of the stockholders. The petition, which was prepared by Henry G. Meyers, Ege's attorney, asserts the company is really insolvent and that any increase in the indebtedness of the company may be a valid claim against the stockholders to the amount of the unpaid portion of their capital stock subscriptions.

The officers of the company are arraigned in drastic terms in the bill, and they are charged with voting themselves large sums of money for salary and expenses, and misrepresenting the true conlition of the company. Some of these alpublished by the company in local newspapers. It is asserted one advertisement cured from an investment of $280. The purchasers of stock is also cited. It is claimed that instead of having franchises in all the towns and right-of-way the entire length of the line, it really has only one franchise and four miles of right-of-

FIRST SAMPLES OF FISH TALES Forcing the Season's Crop, but They Are Warm Members and Serve as Starters.

A few years ago I chanced to be in a tramp through the White hills of New Hampshire, when, near the close of a hot, dusty day, being somewhat wearled and footsore, I sat down on a large rock overhanging one of those little, dashing moun tain streams. Immediately underneath the ceiver for the Omaha & Nebraska Central rock was a small, clear pool of considerable meditating on the distance yet to iravel before a good supper and more comfortable bed could be found, when all of a sudden was brought back to things present by seeing an immense fish come down over the rocks above and drop with a great splash into the pool below. As soon as the water-was stilled I peered over the edge. Glory! There, about two feet below the surface, lay the largest speckled beauty it had ever been my privilege to look upon.

Stealing quietly to my knapsack, it was but the work of a moment to get out the small jointed rod, select the most tempting fly and drop it quietly just above him. He must have been hungry, for he rose like a leged misrepresentative statements are flash, seized the fly and the fun was on quoted in the petition from advertisements. No weary limbs now. Around and around he went. The reel hummed musically as the line played out and in. The fun ended is so worded as to leave the impression and trouble began when he shot down the that an income of $100 a year can be se- outlet. Forty years ago when my father was captain of an east India trading ship, while off the coast of Africa near the equator, the ship's carpenter was taken sick and died. He was sewed up in canvas and with him was sewed his kit of tools and grindstone for ballast to sink him. Services were held and the body committed to the sea.

Four days later the ship's boy fell overboard and a great shark came up under the stern and swallowed the boy before he could be rescued.

The next day the shark was still following the ship. A shark hook was baited and put over the stern and the shark was caught, but was so large it could not be taken on board and they were obliged to shoot him.
