Presidential Year

Every good citizen owes it to himself and to the country to keep well informed on the political events which will culminate in the election of a president, who will be charged with the administration of the national government for four years.

Every good citizen owes it to himself and to his country to post himself about the candidates competing for high political preferment and about the issues on which the great parties will divide in order to decide intelligently how to cast his vote.

The preliminary skirmishing for the great political battle of 1908 is already begun and the position of the principal participants is constantly changing with new developments nearly every day.

The big nominating conventions in prospect, particularly the republican national convention which is to meet in Chicago in June, promises to be the most stirring and interesting gatherings of the kind in the history of the country.

The moving panorama will be vividly and accurately pictured in The Bee from day to day - the candidates will be presented in their own pronouncements and speeches—the issues will be discussed and all the current political happenings will be chronicled as they occur.

NEBRASKA

Politics in Nebraska promise to be at a boiling pointthroughout this year. The Bee's special staff correspondent at Lincoln furnishes the political gossip generated at the state capital and special attention is given to politics locally by experienced political writers.

Politics in Iowa are sure to turn about the contest for the senatorial succession as well as about the presidency. A special staff correspondent at Des Moines is charged with keeping readers of the Bee in touch with all the political currents of the Hawkeye state.

WASHINGTON

National politics center largely in the national capitol where the president and his advisers are at the helm of the government and where congress is in session. The political focal point is at the seat of government where a staff correspondent of The Bee is on the lookout for everything of keen interest to people of this section of the west.

CHICAGO and DENVER

The Bee will have its own representatives on the spot at both of the big nominating conventions and readers of The Bee will get the best inside information of what is done by the president makers and how it is done.
