

SISTER OF MR. CLEVELAND

Mrs. Mary Hoyt is Shocked by News of Brother's Death.

GETS WIRE FROM MRS. CLEVELAND

Reminds His Boyhood Days and Says He Was a Good Son and Brother and Never Gave Parents Trouble.

Only the bare announcement of the death of her distinguished brother telegraphed by Mrs. Cleveland, reached Mrs. Mary Hoyt of 529 Park avenue, Omaha, Wednesday morning. Her telegram came later than the press announcements, but Mrs. Hoyt had not heard of ex-President Cleveland's death until she received the telegram.

Overcome by the news, which came as a shock, Mrs. Hoyt was unable to write to her brother's sister and she had not decided whether it would be possible for her to go east to the funeral and to join other members of the family.

"Only last week I had a letter from Mrs. Cleveland telling me that Grover was improving," said Mrs. Hoyt. "Of course she did not entirely remove my fears, because I knew that he had been suffering for a long time with a dangerous trouble of the heart and kidneys. But when I received Mrs. Cleveland's letter I felt that there was no immediate danger of my brother dying and consequently the news this morning of his death came unexpectedly."

"I can't remember anything now," faltered Mrs. Hoyt in her struggle to keep up under the strain. "He was a dear brother and was always much loved by his sisters. I remember his boyhood days well. He was always an even-tempered and kind young man, and never worried us nor his father and mother. He worked hard, as he was left without a father when he was of age."

"He visited me when out west to attend the unveiling of the Morton monument and has always written me letters, even when he was very busy as president of his country. Since his children have grown up they have written to me and Mrs. Cleveland has written almost every week. I believe my brother wrote to all the members of the family as often as he could and he wrote good letters, too, and combining of adversity nor mourning his illness."

Mrs. Hoyt is the mother of R. C. Hoyt of Omaha and has made her home in this city for a number of years. She is apparently a strong woman and after consulting other members of the family and commencing with her plans in the east may go to the funeral, leaving Omaha Thursday.

R. Cleveland Hoyt, clerk of the United States district court for Nebraska is Mrs. Mary Hoyt's son. Mrs. Hoyt had completed arrangements for a trip to Spokane, Wash., to visit another son, Charles G. Hoyt, in the Indian service near Yakima, intending to leave for Spokane this afternoon. The death of her brother, ex-President Grover Cleveland has caused her to abandon the trip to Spokane.

RARE MAN IN HISTORY OF NATIONS

Dr. Miller Pays Tribute to an Old Personal and Political Friend.

"Well, I am not surprised, though deeply grieved," said Dr. Miller, "that George L. Miller, an old-time personal and political friend of Mr. Cleveland, when he was told of his death. 'I just saw him in May, 1907, and he was wasting away like a girl with consumption—physically, not mentally. Mentally he was as vigorous as ever, but the muscular system was going and I am surprised he has survived the last six months.'"

"Mr. Cleveland was a rare man in the history of nations. Gifts that he possessed are given to few men. He had a marvelous ability to perceive the right, coupled with an unusual courage to do the right after he perceived it. All he wanted or sought was to know the right and that was the thing he did."

"It was one of the most prized privileges of my life to be favored with Mr. Cleveland's friendship and confidence. While he was president, during both of his terms, I had the pleasure of serving him in this state and section more or less in suggesting appointments and by his favor I decided some of them."

"I first saw Mr. Cleveland when the notification of his first nomination came to him in 1884. I found him a man of large and imposing figure, with a great head and face surmounting a breastwork of broad shoulders. He was orad in form and strong in fact. He was governor of New York at that time."

"I heard his first public speech as president-elect and his reply to Senator Vilas of Wisconsin, which was characteristic of the man."

"He asserted his strength of character in his first public life as mayor of Buffalo, giving that city the best government it had ever known. That made him governor. His dominant force and wisdom, his firmness and his singular policies of right and justice as the chief executive of the foremost state of the union made him president. How he filled that great office, with what elevation of purpose he made good his declaration that 'a public office is a public trust,' all the world knows."

"A long interval elapsed after his election to the presidency before I found the opportunity to meet him in a personal way, although I had been in correspondence with him at all times."

"His visit to Arbor lodge in Nebraska City at the time of the unveiling of the Morton monument, presided over by Mrs. Cleveland, ex-Vice President Stevenson and ex-members of the cabinet, gave me an opportunity to renew my personal acquaintance with him. It was most delightful. He was the same Cleveland I had always known, the simple strong, plain in manner, simple in speech, more typical of a farmer going about his business than of a man who had been twice president of the United States and by common consent the first private citizen of the republic."

"I visited him again in May, 1907, in New York City. I met him in the great office of the association of the presidents of the great insurance companies of the country of which he was the official head. He had been made chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Equitable company and held that position until his death. But my visit was in the office of the larger organization."

"I found him not in a condition of physical health that could be called good. Since I had seen him at the Morton monument unveiling a marked change had come. His stout form was reduced. Stronger and deeper lines had appeared on the face. A shrinkage, so to say, was apparent, meaning a gradual emaciation. But his mind was clear as a bell and in animation as in repose. His eye showed the same expression as always in the presence of friends."

"He talked freely of the political situation and I drew from him a full expression of the views he then held on men and affairs. Reserving himself on some points suggested by me, he was quite frank on others. I have no warrant for repeating anything he said, but I may say I never saw him when he was more calm or soiled in his judgment of men and things. He deplored the condition of his party and seemed at a loss to account for what had happened and was happening, but was evidently hopeful that the American people and especially the democratic party would return to what he would probably have called 'sanity and safety' though he did not use those words."

"Mr. Cleveland was a democrat; he was always a democrat and he knew why he was a democrat. Those great principles of the party, which he always advocated, were dear to him to the time of his death. He loved his country with a lofty patriotism that was simply passionate and nothing could swerve him from the course of his convictions."

"For public clamor arising from the designs of partisanship and the ignorance of the misled multitude he had simply contempt and pity which in the concrete amounts to scorn."

"It should go without saying that I have the most profound respect and admiration for Grover Cleveland. In weight of character and power, in honesty of purpose and in his peculiar grasp of all questions as if by intuition and his undying ability to reach the right and righteous result he was without an equal in the country. When he spoke upon any question of serious concern, he commanded the confidence of more men of intelligence and character and more respect from the masses of citizens of this country than any other man in this generation of public men except Abraham Lincoln."

On the platform at the unveiling of the Morton monument, John Steinart, president of the monument association, who presided, had Mr. Cleveland and Dr. Miller seated to the left and apart from the other distinguished guests. In the intervals of the program they conversed together and at one time Dr. Miller said to Mr. Cleveland:

"This great throng is gathered here to do honor to the memory of Mr. Morton, but the people have come also with the desire in their hearts to see you and their presence here is to a considerable degree a mark of respect and homage to yourself."

Mr. Cleveland's eyes filled and, leaning over to Dr. Miller, he said in a voice full of emotion:

"I only trust that I may deserve it."

After the monument exercises were over, Mr. Cleveland stepped to Dr. Miller's side and was overheard to remark:

"Miller, your speech was the best of all."

"Oh, you are kind to me and want to make me feel good," replied the doctor, whose emotion on the occasion was so apparent, he and Mr. Morton having been most intimate of friends, that he was not satisfied with his phrase.

"No, what you said had more in it than what all the rest of us said, put together," rejoined the ex-president.

POISON PROPERTY IN OMAHA

Wife of Ex-President Once Owned Considerable Realty Here.

Mrs. Cleveland owned three pieces of property in Omaha, but all of these have been sold. One of these was lot 2, block 118, which is the next lot west of the old Edward Rosewater home on Douglas street between Seventeenth and Eighteenth streets. This was sold by Mrs. Cleveland in 1905 for $25,000.

The lot on the northwest corner of Twenty-second and Cumming streets was sold in March, 1907, to D. C. McDowell for $400. A half lot located on Cumming street between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets was sold to A. Alphin in October, 1907, for $2,000.

Mrs. Cleveland acquired her property holdings in Omaha through her grandfather, John B. Folsom, and his brother, Benjamin R. Folsom. They came here in 1857 and brought a large amount of property. After their death the property was left in their estates and in 1891 it was divided among the heirs, the three lots above named falling to the share of Mrs. Cleveland. The Byron Reed company was her local agent.

The Bee of October 12, 1887, on the occasion of the visit of President and Mrs. Cleveland, said:

Over thirty years ago John B. Folsom, the grandfather of the present Mrs. Cleveland, together with his brother, Benjamin R. Folsom, came to Omaha, giving that city the best government it had ever known. That made him governor. His dominant force and wisdom, his firmness and his singular policies of right and justice as the chief executive of the foremost state of the union made him president.
