bitterly arraigned Attorney General F. C. Jackson and the authorities of Kansas, in speaking before the National Live Stock exchange meeting at South Omaha.

"Do you ask if I mean in speaking of the suits brought against the live stock exchanges and the anti-trust laws that the great state of Kansas, acting through the highest legal official is harassing a business, which sends to it each year nearly $100,000,000?" inquired Mr. Swift.

"I want to tell you that that is just what I mean, but in the light of such developments as were shown in the last cooperative case and in view of such clear struggle efforts can there be but one conclusion. The end is near. Let us hope repentance will come ere the final scene, but in the mean time keep our powder dry."

Mr. Swift declared that sworn testimony offered at the Kansas hearing that the commission men had entered into an agreement to sell only to the speculators, was absolutely without foundation and that the fact is known all over the west that everyone with money or credit can buy any stock offered for sale at any live stock market in the United States if an agreement as to the price is reached.

"The litigation against us has been inspired by the forlorn hope of the cooperative commission company, whose only active cooperation has been along the lines of destroying markets, stifling competition and insuring the regular rotation and return of a substantial monthly stipend to the active promoters."

"This is not a general statement—it is a matter of record in the evidence taken by the attorney general of the state of Kansas from the mouth of his own star witnesses, who testified that he and his company were behind the suit. He said that his reason for bringing the suit was the fact that no farmer nor feeder could buy his stock in our great markets except from a speculator—and this was his sworn testimony—the foundation of all his actions, and everyone knows that it was false."

"When questioned as to the source of his information the star witness for the attorney general of Kansas named one farmer in Iowa whom he had met in Colorado, and when further pressed for sources of his information he said a commission man at Kansas City had told him, and when he refused to give the name of the commission man and the officers were about to issue a jail commitment for this great man who had sworn was a commission man—one of those unfortunate traders—not commission men, who had fallen in his weakness, it was discovered that he was enjoying his liberty only because he had secured a bond while an indictment of perjury against him was being prepared for trial.

"The one witness who the attorney general of Kansas used against us might be well said to constitute the whole rogues' gallery of the Kansas City stock yards."

"Right is might and truth will prevail, and so we are assembled here today, not perhaps stronger in numbers, but immensely stronger in our power for good and our belief in that power. I cannot but congratulate you gentlemen in your splendid spirit and in your apparent realization not alone in the fact that yours is a calling administered in an unparalleled manner. Yours is a record which is a striking page in the commercial history of the west western country. A business founded upon honor, not a single selling transaction which is binding, not a single dollar of whose millions goes astray, all because of your personal qualities and the operation of these exchanges."

All Will Boast for Omaha.

As to the meeting in Omaha, ex-President Swift said that no member of his twentieth annual meeting would go away who would not say a good word for Omaha, "not because the city needs it, but because it deserves it."

Mr. Swift's address was the first of the morning. He had worked on it during the night and came to Omaha after two weeks of struggle with the floods at the Union Stock yards in Kansas City, but he was an eloquent speaker.

After several complimentary comments by J. W. Moore of Chicago and F. S. Graves of Indianapolis on the merits of the address of J. C. Swift, the president introduced George V. Wells of Chicago as the veteran spokesman of the greatest market in the world.

On Live Stock Exchanges.

Mr. Wells' topic was, "Live Stock Exchanges. The Reason for Their Existence."

Their Limitations." He said in the course of an exhaustive argument:

"The reasons for the existence lies in the economic conditions which obtain in this nation. These are such as demand organization to protect the interests of so large a body of men engaged in a similar business. We must do this limit competition in such a way as to give all members the chance to exist in the exercise of all fair methods. We must improve on old forms of business so as to insure a square deal between not only our members, but the whole world of our patronage.

In fact the development of the exchange has been exactly in parallel with labor organizations and the aspirations of business men the country over. As there are forces at work ever tending to reduce the price and profit of labor, against which the working man must organize, so in our business there are elements of disruption and opposition which can be combated successfully only by organization.

"The commission man has a place between the big monopolies on one side and the sensitive public on the other, and the exercise of great wisdom is necessary and these exchanges are for the purpose of assisting the judgment of our members and directing their efforts. We must cease our labor before we infringe on the rights of men freely competing with us on equal terms and let the limit of our organization be the side of a combination in restraint of trade."

C. F. Watkins Talks.

Speaking on the subject of "The Live Stock Commission Man and His Place in the Business World," C. F. Watkins of Buffalo, N. Y., took up the same thread of argument which was used yesterday by Edgar E. Overstreet of St. Louis and by J. C. Swift of Kansas City. One of Mr. Watkins' first statements were: "That the matter of exchange organization is unselfish and has not been for the aggrandizement of the commission man; that it is in the interests of the producer and the shipper as well as of himself, and that in it the commission man has been honest and honorable, is evidenced by the fact that he has built up and now conducts an enormous business without ever having made any attempt at or shown any disposition toward monopoly."

Free and Open to All.

Continuing Mr. Watkins said in part: "The merits of the live stock trade are now after many years of the development of organization, as free and open to the new beginner in the business, or to the small trader, as are the opportunities of starting a cobbler's shop in any town or city. And, likewise, the small producer, the farmer raising but a few head of cattle, hogs or sheep, is now enabled to market his product as readily and safely, and with the positive assurance of receiving its full value, at as low a proportionate expense as can be the big dealer or the ranchman who may handle thousands of head. And without hesitation of the slightest fear of competition credit this condition of affairs entirely to the "organized" commission man. While he has in a measure benefited himself, and his associates, and his degree, benefited others. With relation to how many other lines of extensive business can parallel statements be made?

Relation to Other Businesses.

A notable difference between our line of business and many others is that in the future the tendency will be toward production in smaller instead of larger lots, rather than from smaller to larger, and yet the total volume must increase. A larger number of people will raise a few head and the commission man will find himself an increasing number of feeders and a deck of hogs and a car of cattle and market their products themselves, and who will furnish such advice, based upon an accurate knowledge of conditions, and with due consideration to the natural capabilities of the different territories and localities.

The commission man will need to practically develop himself into a bureau of information, will need to be increasingly better informed regarding supply and demand, not only at his own market, but in his tributary territory, but all over the country, and in foreign countries. Owing to the business of the hour and the waiting luncheon in the Exchange dining hall below, Jay Lavery cut his remarks short and the program proceeded.

RIGID FOR SOLICITOR RULE TWO Executive Committee Recommends Complete Enforcement of This.

When the executive committee of the national exchange met in the hall of the South Omaha exchange at 8 o'clock Friday morning to prepare the annual report to the exchange it was decided to recommend the most rigid enforcement and strictest interpretation of the "actor rule 2" adopted at the Buffalo meeting, to permit the Missouri river commission men to subdivide commissions on live stock forwarded from one commission firm to another at western points, and that Colonel T. B. McPherson of Omaha be authorized to organize a subcommittee of the executive committee for making public the affairs, methods and principles of the live stock exchange and the way in which commission men handle the live stock consigned to them, that any prejudice against the exchanges and any misconception of their object might be averted.

The committee recommended the work be done to eradicate tuberculosis in the following section of the report: "Your committee, in conformity with the Ransom tuberculosis resolution has taken up with the working men of the state government the question of the enactment of legislation looking to the eradication of tuberculosis and the feeding of the live stock in the country and are pleased to report a keen interest in the matter and an almost universal disposition to support the enactment of such laws and regulations through their respective legislatures and live stock boards, and will secure results and the movements can be said to be but the beginning of the work to be done. We think the time ripe for the introduction of such legislation. Along these lines which must be matured providing for a systematic effort by the entire live stock industry, the committee is a decisive action in a few states it will be a comparatively easy matter to finish the eradication of tuberculosis in the country among our live stock will be a thing of the past. Your committee recommends vigorous action in this matter and asks you continue to press the necessities until positive and definite results are secured."

"That the live stock buyers and sellers will ask for legislation by the next congress of the United States to secure fewer delays in transportation and less trouble in securing cars from the railroad companies was discussed in the following section from the report of the committee and commending the Culbertson-Smith car supply and train service bill:

In the matter of the movement of live stock by transportation companies, delays in furnishing cars and shipping of the cargo, the committee advises that this measure contain a provision for the transportation of live stock. Without delay regulations seemingly necessary for all the foreign commerce for hearing as to the necessities for such legislation as to the not all the features of the measure were strongly commended at the hearing of the railroad interests. In the month of March this year, your committee, accompanied by your president, secretary and S. W. Jeffrey of the Pittsburg exchange and G. W. Moore of the Chicago exchange and G. B. Van Norden of the Milwaukee exchange, appeared before the committee and furnished such information regarding existing conditions and the necessities for federal regulation as was at its command for the information of congress in shaping legislation to meet the necessities of the case, and urged the passage of this or a similar measure in the interests of the producers and shippers of the country.

The members of the congressional committee evidenced a keen interest in the presentation made by your committee and your colleagues, and while the hearings were not concluded in time to report the bill out of committee to the next session of congress, your committee believes that it, together with other similar interests, has laid the foundation and furnished the necessary data for a "committee bill" on the subject, which will be presented in both branches of congress at the next session.

Those who compose the executive committee: T. B. McPherson, Omaha; John W. Moore, Chicago; G. W. Walt, Sioux City; A. Dally, St. Joseph; F. C. Pinkerton, St. Louis; C. L. Haas, St. Paul; M. F. Joyce, St. Paul; N. W. Ransom (deceased), Buffalo, T. S. Graves, Indianapolis; J. W. Holmes, Milwaukee; E. M. Chandler, Peoria; F. H. Goodrich, Louisville; J. H. Campion, Denver; L. E. Lenson, Kansas City; C. W. Baker, Chicago.

DANCE AND BANQUET FOR GUESTS

Local Exchange Gives Big Affair for Visitors.

The dance pavilion at the Omaha Field club was converted into a bower of flowers Friday evening for the dinner tendered by the South Omaha Live Stock exchange to the visiting delegates of the National Live Stock exchange. No more beautiful or better appointed affair was ever held at the Field club and the tables, three lengths wide the entire length of the pavilion with a cross table at the west end for the officers and special guests of the evening were completely laden with cut flowers. The canopy was of red trailing Ramblers and the tables were laden with white roses, sweet peas, carnations and greens, making a beautiful ensemble.

The committee of arrangements consisted of Jay Lavery, chairman; James G. Martin, G. I. Ingwersen, W. E. Tagg and W. E. Wood. The reception committee consisted
