The Modern Maiden

Does she sigh for the knight or the olden To break a lance in some manly bout? Does she mourn for the lover of ancient ways. With the valor brave and the courage I have not heard her.

Does she weep for the beau with the stalwart form.

The ruddy cheek and the flashing eye?
For the old-time beau with the hand-clash warm

And the tender heart, does this maiden sigh?

We haven't noticed it.

Does she wait for the swain with the willing hand.
Who must hoe his row in the good old style? Does she yearn for the chap without house and land. Because of his cheerful, winning smile?
I don't think so.

Does she hab the fellow with lots of dough Without a thought of his name or worth? Does she gobble the youth who has got the "go."

In spite of his manners or name or birth?

It looks that way.

Does she "nail" the suitor with wealth to Lawrie, two. In spite of vocation or age or phix?

Does she drop all chaff when it comes he

And make the fellow get down to big?

Bhe does indeed.

Weadings and Engagements,

One of the prettiest summer weddings took place Saturday afternoon at the home ing a few weeks at the summer resorts of Mrs. Joseph Allen, when her niece, Miss near Boston and are expected home the Pearl Ley, became the bride of Mr. William Edwin Davis. The rooms and the porch which was enclosed, were elaborately decorated with asparagus ferns, pink sweet peas, pink popples and brown catkins or cattails, giving the appearance of a summer garden. The rooms were lighted with pink lanterns, with shades of pink sweet peas, The ceremony was performed in the drawing room by Rev. T. J. Mackay, Little Miss Helen Birkmier, niece of the bride, was flower girl and carried a basket of sweet peas. Miss Weston, who was maid of honor, wore a dainty gown of pink and carried pink sweet peas. The bride was attractive in a gown of white chiffon trimmed with real lace and tucks. Mr. John R. Manchester, uncle of the bride, gave her away and Mr. Clyde Weston served as from Denver and is the guest of Miss by Miss Pearl Chamberlain, and Miss Curtis for several days. Mrs. Jacobs is Gwendoline White gave several vocal selections. Miss White also caught the bride's bouquet. After a wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Davis will be at home after Septem-
