O'D TRUNK HE BANKED ON

Romance of Western Editor Centered in Battered Box.

DOESN'T MIND THE JOSHING

Practical Joke Which Led Him from Editorial Short Grass to Luscious Pastures of "That Sweetheart of Mine."

A party of editors of western weekly papers, after a little visit around New York a while back, were checking their baggage at the ferry station upon the eve of their departure from that seaboard when the dispirited, agitated appearance of the trunk of one of the editors came in for a lot of gazing. It was a small, very old-fashioned trunk, and it had seen so much service that it required four heavy trunk straps to hold it together. The man to whom the trunk belonged, who took the joshing all in good part, got back at the rollers with this:

"Don't you fellows bother your heads about that old box. It's getting pretty old and disreputable looking. I'll admit, but I'm not going to make any attempt to lose it until it falls apart, and then I'm going to put it old bones away and keep 'em dusted. That old trunk won't me my wife."

used to call upon her two or three evenings a week. But I was only one of about half a dozen young fellows in the town who were calling upon her right regularly, and all of them were a heap better off in this way than I was, for I wasn't in any prospect, than I was at that stage of my life.

Stayed in the Game.

"It was for this reason that I didn't exactly say how I stood with the girl, but I wasn't going to permit myself to be frozen out by the others until I got the direct word from her. She was pretty cordial in her treatment of me and when I happened to find other fellows calling upon her when I visited her home she generally let it appear through the crafty little ways that women pick up as soon as they quit wearing their hair in braids that she'd just as lief I'd outstay the other fellows as not.

"I seemed to be making as much if not more progress than any of the other editors, but as I wasn't making much more than a bare living out of my paper I wasn't in any shape to propose, especially as the girl's father was extremely comfortable financially, and I couldn't entertain the idea of marrying a girl with considerable expectations until I had fixed things so that I had some worth while expectations of my own.

"Well, anyhow, the frequency of my visits and the cordial welcome I always got from the girl aroused the jealousy of the other editors naturally enough, and one evening after I'd been a caller at her house for about a year they put up a job on me.

down the front steps on his way to his lodge meeting.

"My rivals had kidnaped the trunk from my room and sent it to the home of the young lady in the grocery wagon, with the idea, of course, of putting me in a foolish and meanly light before her and her father.

"What's this?" inquired the old gentleman as the driver of the wagon, at my command, dumped my little old trunk on the lawn.

"I asked the driver how he'd happened to fetch my trunk to that place, and he confirmed my suspicions by informing me that he'd been instructed so to deliver it by a number of my rival editors. The old gentleman cocked up his ear at this.

The Old Man Was on.

"It's not my fault, as you can see, sir," I said to the girl's dad, for I felt pretty cheap even under the circumstances. "I hope you fully understand that I wouldn't have a hand in anything so idiotic."

"That's all right, son—perfectly all right," observed the fine old boy, eyeing me shrewdly, and then casting his twinkling gaze over in his daughter's direction. "You and Mary had anything to say to each other yet?"

chin and went his ponderous way chuckling to himself.

"Which is all of the story, or nearly. Mary had promised herself to me before the old gentleman had more than half way reached his lodge meeting, and before the evening was over blamed it she hadn't looked up at me in a shy sort of way and asked me if there weren't any socks in that trunk of mine that needed darning! So the joke was for sure on the chaps who had thought to be funny by sending that dinky little trunk of mine to my sweet-heart's home, and I have reason to know that some of them are kicking themselves yet."—New York Sun.

Bryan in a Jestful Mood.

At a jesting reference to his status as a candidate Mr. Bryan laughed heartily. "That reminds me," said he, "that in 1904, when I was not a candidate, an old lady stopped me in the street to ask, 'Say, Mr. Bryan, who is running against you this year?'"

PERILS OF AERIAL FLIGHT

Many Dangers Which Air Navigators Find Difficult to Overcome.

There are certain grave dangers which are always present in navigable balloons. Every time such a vessel makes an ascent the passengers run the risk of the balloon bursting owing to the sudden expansion of the gas causing an exceptional distention of the envelope.

The ordinary old-fashioned balloon simply consists of a bag of gas, the bottom of which is left open; as a result there is no fear of the balloon bursting. When a spherical balloon reaches such a height that the gas expands there is not the slightest danger of any bursting taking place, as the gas escapes through the open top. This is why the balloon is orange-shaped when it goes up and pear-shaped when it comes down.

Inexperienced aeronauts do not always make proper use of these, and so the balloon bursts.

The navigable balloon, when driven through the air at a high velocity, also runs a great risk of bursting in another way unknown to the spherical kind. There is a great tendency for the end of the balloon to be blown out. This is not the front part of the bag, as might be imagined, but the rear part.

The gas in the front part of the concern is pressed upon heavily by the atmosphere as the balloon rushes along, and this forces the gas against the hinder portion. Not only is there additional pressure of the gas at the back part, but there is no pressure of air in fact, a vacuum is formed.

The result is a dangerous pressure, which is often sufficient to burst out the end of the envelope, and so cause a terrible disaster. In order to cope with this, the best dirigible balloons have extra thicknesses of material in order to strengthen the rear end, and so to prevent the tail point of the balloon being forced out.

Another serious danger to the cigar-shaped balloon is the presence of clouds passing in front of the sun. The passage of a cloud in front of the sun will cast a shadow which chills the gas to such an extent that the balloon will wrinkle and descend with considerable velocity. On the other hand, should the clouds break and the sun shine through, the gas may expand with sudden force sufficient to burst the envelope.

If much ballast is thrown out the balloon is bound to come to grief and a terrible disaster happens. Greatly mistaken notions are prevalent regarding the amount of ballast which is thrown out in order to make a balloon rise. A sackful of ballast thrown out at once is pretty certain to cause disaster; even if a mere handful of sand be thrown out it is sufficient to make the balloon jump to an appreciable height.—Brooklyn Eagle.

S.S.S. MAKES A LASTING CURE

There are certain mineral medicines which will remove the external symptoms of Contagious Blood Poison, and shut the disease up in the system for a while, but the treatment is left off the disease will surely return. Then the loathsome symptoms of ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, sores and ulcers, etc., are usually worse because the disease has made rapid progress on the internal members, and weakened the constitution and general health of the sufferer. S. S. S. is the only remedy that can be used with perfect safety in the treatment of Contagious Blood Poison, and with the assurance that a lasting cure will result. This medicine, made entirely of roots and herbs of recognized curative and tonic value, antiseptics and destroys the powerful virus of the disease, and by purifying the blood of every particle of the poison and enriching and strengthening the circulation, removes every symptom of the trouble. S. S. S. does not hide or cover up the disease in any way, but drives it entirely out from the blood, leaving not the slightest trace for future outbreaks.
