Question of Raise in Freight Rates Still Dominant Feature in News Concerning Railroad

NEW YORK. July 18.—Another substantial uplift put prices of stocks to the highest point of the week and in some prominent cases to the highest point of the year. The closing tone was very buoyant and animated. United States Steel was a constitution, included an large allegation. animated. United States Steel was a conspicuous materic and a large absorption of this stock caused a material sympathetic effect on the whole list. This sympathy was especially marked in the case of Pennsylvania, owing to the large proportion of tree and stell products in the traffic of that coad. It was affected also by the statement given out for publication by the president of the company in which he favored the general policy of advances in freight rates, thus altering a previous impression of the opposition of that company to that policy.

of the opposition of that company to that policy.

The question of freight rate advances still occupies a foremost place of interest for the financial world. The belief in progress toward that end was confirmed by the day's news of a determination to advance rates by the Southwestern Freight association and the Southeastern Mississippi Valley association. The intended increase in freight rates is a stimulating influence in the demand for securities. The effect did not seem to be modified today by the expressed opinion of an interstate commorce commissioner that a general increase in freight rates such as has been reported was in contemplation would be a violation of the Sherman anti-trust law. The strength of United States Steel was festered by the optimistic views of its president as reported in published interviews. An adjustment of the wage scale with its employes by the Republic Iron and Steel company helped the steel industrials. Mercantle agencies reported a moderate but steady increase in business activity, which is shown also by the country's bank clearings. Another increase in the number of idle freight cars for the two weeks ending ings. Another increase in the number of idle freight cars for the two weeks ending July 8 strengthened the continuation of improving business conditions.

Bonds were strong. Total sales, par value, $2,134,000. United States bonds have

ENGLISH VIEW OF CLEVELAND

Revised References to Famous Venezuela Episode.

MANY EVEN TEMPERED COMMENTS

Newspapers of Great Britain Have New Light in Their Estimate of that Warlike Incident.

LONDON. July 18.-(Special.)-English omments on Grover Cleveland's Venezuela message in the long and usually highly complimentary obligary notices are so significant of the great change that has come over public opinion here regarding the United States since that day in 1895, when the two countries were so near to war that it will be found interesting to read a few of the more widely representative views. In the middle of almost a column and a half of eulogy the Morning Post refers thus to the incident: "In his second term came the Venezuela dispute, and in this matter Cleveland formed a strong, but as we may now yen ture to say, a hasty judgment. He thought the British government was trying to gain fresh ground in Guinna. Many Americans thought so, for the generation to which Cleveland belorged had been brought up in the tradition that England was the onpressor, a tradition not yet dead in spite of the fairmindedness of the best modern American historians. The message sent by Cleveland to congress on this subject and the dispatches of Mr. Olney, then secretary of state, seemed to many Englishmen to contain a challenge, which ought on the secound of right and justice to be taken up. The late marguis of Salisbury thought otherwise, and the matter was settled without a quarrel, and happily settled, for in the end both Cleveland and the majority of his countrymen saw that they had misjudged England."

His Extraordinary Message.

The Daily Telegraph says: "His second presidency does not compare quite favorably with his first. The fact which will stand out from it in the memory of Englishmen is the extraordinary measage which he sent to congress on the question of Venezuela. This was the message in which he spoke as if a war between the United States and England were almost going to break out, and as if nothing but an appeal to arms would extort from England a recognition of American claims. The matter in dispute was strangely disproportionate to language of such lofty and unprovoked menace-merely some portion of a not very important part of a not very important republic in Southern America; and the feeling produced in England was some thing like incredulity, followed by stupefaction. However, the country kepf its head; so did Lord Salisbury, who was eminently peaceful by temper and by training; and the end was the reference of this question-not to battlefields, but to a peaceful court of arbitrators seated in a quiet hall in Paris."

The Daily News, which was founded by Charles Dickens, says: "It is not necessary to recall the circumstances of the Venezuelan conflict; but the effect of that conflict was to establish the Monroe doctrine as the bedrock of American policy. The doctrine was at the back BERLIN, July 18.—Trading on the Bourse of the historic policy of the United States, but it had never been promulgated with oday was dull and prices were firm. The but it had never been promulgated with The fact that he was an anti-Jingo gave his action increased force. The effect was historic and final. It left no doubt in the American relations that British statesmen did not understand the psychology of the American people, and too often treated the United States as if it were merely a secondrate power, forgetting that the Americans are a very proud and sensitive people; it was the misfortune of the Americans that they made a foot ball of international politics to be used for the advantage of domestic politics; and in their diplomacy the 'shirt sleeve' method appealed to them; it was proof to all the world that they were too honest and too outspoken to resort to the subtleties of diplomatic finesse. What angered Mr. Cleveland and his secretary of state, Mr. Olney, was the apparent indifference of the British government, the long interval that clapsed between the receipt of an American note and its reply, the evident inclination to prolong the controversy. A little more tact on both sides would have saved an embarrassing situation.

The Evening Standard observes: "We have long since forgiven his indiscreet threats when we were attempting, not without success, to secure our just rights in the matter of the Venezuelan-Guiana boundary. Subsequent events proved the president to be entirely in the wrong, and without any unseemly malevolence we may be allowed a smile. On the very eve of the death of Venezuela's champion came the announcement that the great republic had felt itself so outraged by President Castro's conduct that it had broken off all diplomatic negotiations with him.
