WILLIE ASTOR IS UPIISH

Expatriated American Snobs Royalty at Daughter's Concert.

HAUGHTIEST MAN IN ENGLAND

British Commons and Americans All Right, He Says, but Entertaining Kings Involves Too Much Groveling.

LONDON, July 25.—Although not a single royalty was present at the sumptuously organized concert which William Waldorf Astor gave the other night at his town house, it was the most striking and successful event of the season. It is quite an open secret that the king and queen as well as the Connaughts were pining for invitations. The queen especially desired to hear the wonderful music, but the "bear" of the Terrace, as someone has called the multi-millionaire, was not having any royalties. His daughter-in-law, Mrs. Waldorf Astor, who has considerable influence with him, tried to coax him to admit her great friends, the Connaughts, but he would not harbor such an idea for a moment.

Astor grows more moody and "nervy" as time goes on and he is succeeding in making everyone afraid of him. "You can have all the British commons and as many Americans as you like," he told his daughter-in-law, "but I draw the line at people of the blood royal. Entertaining them involves far too much groveling for my taste. I like to be master in my own house and not a worm." Astor is regarded as the haughtiest man in the kingdom. Some time ago he paraphrased the expression by saying he would prefer to be the first man in his own house than the second at Windsor castle.

It was Tetrazzini who the host took in to supper at the memorable party, a fact which gave the greatest offence to several persons and others present. He was never pleased than otherwise when he heard this. Paderewski, who had rooms at the Palace hotel, stayed the night at Carlton House Terrace. This he invariably does when he plays for Mr. Astor. They are the closest friends. For his performances he received a cheque for $2,000. Tetrazzini was also presented with one for the same amount. An American debutante told me Mr. Astor kissed the prima donna's hand as he handed her the cheque and as she pocketed it she said, "You dear man, I should sing for you for nothing." People who know the diva, however, accepted this with the usual grain of salt.

Mrs. Palmer May Buy. There is an idea about that Mrs. Potter Palmer would buy Hampton House from the Abercorns. She was very anxious to do so at one time and there were some negotiations with that end in view a few months ago. The Abercorns, however, wanted a "fancy" price for the dual abode which immediately "put off" the lady from Chicago who, notwithstanding her immense wealth, has a most correct estimate of the value of money. She knows the worth of everything from an apple to a masterpiece and though she is willing enough to pay a fair price she will not give a cent more. Now she is said to have her eye on Dorchester House, with the object of buying it as a permanent London residence, but she realizes that directly she makes a definite offer for it the price will go up. Colonel Holford has already been ap-

ATTACKS HOUSE OF COMMONS

Victor Grayson, M. P., Says it is Diabolical Humbug.

HAMPERS WORK OF LAW MAKING

Socialist Member About to Visit America Declares Lower Body is Useful Only as Speakers Platform.

LONDON, July 25.—(Special.)—Victor Grayson, M. P., who recently attained the distinction of being among the four members of Parliament "blacklisted" by the king from attendance at his majesty's garden party—has announced his intention of soon going to America to study social conditions. Grayson, Keir Hardie, Harry Marks and Arthur Ponsonby all voted against the king's visit to the czar Russia. King Edward has retaliated by not inviting them to his garden party, which is a marked "snub." Grayson is grieved under the circumstances to be singled out for royal disfavor, as it compensates him for his failure to deliver his great speech protesting against the king of England's hobnobbing with the Russian autocrat, and enables him to express his social martyrdom his sympathy with what he considers his down-trodden Russian compatriots. Getting into Parliament is the end and aim of most ambit uous Brit'ishers; but Grayson—the recent successful candidate from Colne Valley—looks upon his triumph rather as a means to an end. He is a member of the House of Commons, but he is not contented with the ordinary life of a member. He is a man of great aspirations to fame, in the sense that it is their "finis" for good work in the world. Grayson, by the way, is one of the youngest members of the House of Commons, being only twenty-seven, and yet, perhaps, he is the most picturesque personality in Parliament. He has won his way into the house through sheer force of individual popularity, and that among the poorest section of the people.

Belfast Speech Brings Fame.

He sprung suddenly into fame during the Belfast strike by a speech in which he is reported to have advised the strikers to use glass-bottles to fight with if they could not get guns. His speech against granting Lord Cromer an award of $20,000 for his role in Egypt also "brought him out."

Grayson holds strong views on Parliamentary efficiency. Dealing with that subject in the course of a recent interview granted to the writer, he made the following rather startling statement: "The ancient chamber is swaddled in the medieval vestments of pompous and now meaningless procedure. The legislative machinery is exquisitely devised to prevent or at least render difficult any change in stereotyped institutions. "The game of parliamentary diabolism," continued the M. P., "is opened each year by the king. All the voluptuous sensuousness of oriental splendor, a dazzling and bewildering mass of color, the pomp of interred ecclesiastical and coronated nobility surround the throne. The eagerly listening Commons crowd the galleries and below the bar to hear fall from the gracious lips the legislative promise of the year. The whole thing is pervaded with an air of childish theatricality. Each begoggled flunkey goes through a stupid obsequiousness, as if his crawling and springing mattered in the slightest degree to humanity. The measures included in

WHAT IS A LALLAPALOOZA?

American Startles London with Word and Reporter Finally Solves the Problem.

LONDON, July 25.—(Special.)—Americans traveling in England should be careful of their use of expressions. Two Chicagoans who were seeing London from the top of an omnibus the other day, made frequent use of the word "lallapalooza" with disastrous results. One of them, a native Brit'isher, one of whom heard the expression and wrote to a local paper asking for a translation of the Americanism. The paper referred the hard nut to its readers and "What is lallapalooza?" threatens to become as great a national problem as was "How old is Aunt?"

The editor of the enterprising paper, of course, dispatched one of his star reporters on a quest for a "lallapalooza" with instructions to "get a picture of it if possible." The newspaperman immediately repaired to the British museum and interviewed a long-haired scholar. "There is no thing as a 'lallapalooza' on exhibition here," announced that worthy after serious thought and a prolonged reference to the catalogue. "There is a bare possibility, however, that it may be among the unclassified specimens in the cellar. Call around again in a week and I will have a search made in the meantime. Where does it come from?" "Oh, from the United States," answered the reporter. A look of sadness, like a tattered veil, settled on the features of the scientist.

"From America, you say?" he said finally. "Ah, there are many freaks in the United States that have not yet reached the museum. But they will be here for future generations."

Eventually the newspaper man landed up against a Yankee who took the question seriously and this is what he said: "There is no thing as a 'lallapalooza' in the United States. It expresses astonishment at any strange sight or object. It might apply to a street accident in which a cab-horse, a coaster cart and an automobile were tangled up together, or to a very tall story. "I heard an Englishman say the other day, 'Well, that's a knock-out,' and I guess that's a good translation for 'Well, that's a lallapalooza.' "For instance, if I spied a stout lady in a director's gown with a market garden on a three-foot hat, I should say, 'Well, that's a lallapalooza.' "

Motoring novels are still rated among the "best sellers."

NEW BEDFORD, Mass., July 25.—In a collision in a fog in Long Island sound today the New York line steamer Maine sank the Rockland schooner Charley Woolsey, but saved the Woolsey's crew of five men. The schooner, which was bound from Free-idence to New York, was practically cut in two. The Maine's bow was badly damaged.
