shared by nonunion men as well as by union men.

The not understand me to say that a labor organization is perfect: the king can do no wrong can no more be spoken of a group than of individuals. The labor organization is composed of men; its affairs are controlled by Muman beings, and human beings are not perfect. All that man touches is stained with man's imperfections and his frailty can be traced through all his works. But, fortunately for the laboring man, the judgment pronounced against his mistakes must be tempered by the fact that those with whom the laboring man comes into contact are also likely to err. When the employe deals with the employer he is dealing with one of like passions with himself. Each is likely to be insistent upon what he believes to be right, and the opinion of each, as to what is right, is likely to be colored by selfish interests and affected by incomplete information as to the facts. If the employe has sometimes resorted to violence to enforce his wishes, the employer has sometimes employed his position to secure an unfair share of the joint product. It is the province of the law to place limitations upon the prosument. The jury system must be preserved, and we cannot hope to preserved and we cannot hope to preserved, and we cannot hope to preserve it if, for any reason or under any pretext. We permit any clitizen to be denied the protection which it furnishes.

According to the Declaration of Independence, governments are instituted employed his position to secure an untark chare of the joint product. It is the province of the law to place limitations upon both, and the security of our government is found in the fact that both employer and employe, in their calmer moments, will join in the enactment of laws which will restrain them in moments of tempistion. Some assume that labor is lawless and that to settle the labor question permanently we need only enforce the law rigorously. I yield to none in insistence upon obedience to the law. Law is necessary in human society, and its enforcement is essential to peace and order, but we must remedy abuses by law if we would insure respect for, and obedience to, law.

"The important lesson to be learned by the citizen in a government like our is that the ballot is both shield and sword—it protects him from injury and enforces his rights.

"The labor organization has been seriously handleapped by the fact that it has not been done unwittingly—yoked up with the industrial combinations known as trusts. The proneness of trust defenders to use the labor organization as an excuse for combinations in restraint of trade has aroused the suspicion that they have been classed together for the purpose of shielding the combinations of capital. As the result of eighteen years of anti-trust legislation, only one man has been given pennal sentence for violating the federal law on this subject.

violating the federal law on this subject, and that man was a member of a labor organization rather than a trust magnate. The laboring man is justified in his de mand that a distinction shall be drawn between the labor organization and the industrial monopoly.

The trust and the labor organization cannot be described in the same language. The trust magnates have used their power to amass swollen fortunes, while no one will say that the labor organization has as yet secured for its members more than their share of the profits arising from their their share of the profits arising from their cannot be described in the same language, work. But there are fundamental differences. The trust is a combination of dollars; the labor organization is an association of human beings. In a trust a few men attemtp to control the products of others; in a labor organization, the members unite for the protection of that which is their own, namely, their own labor which, being necessary to their existence s a part of them. The trust deals with dead matter; the labor organization deals with life and with intellectual and moral forces. No impartial student of the sub feet will dany the right of the laboring man to exemption from the operation of the existing anti-trust law. "If the labor organization needs to be regulated by law, let it be regulated Ly a law which deals with man as man, and not by a law that was aimed to prevent the cornering of a commodity or the forestailing of the market." The Injunction Issue. After discussing the injunction issue, Mr.

Bryan said: There are two questions, however, inti-mately connected with the labor problem upon which the democratic and republican parties do not agree, and I not only feel at liberty to discuss these, but, under the circumstances. I have no right to issues

One relates to the issue of injunctions and the other to contempt cases arising under injunctions. The republican convention did not deal candidly with the laboring man on the subject of the writ of injunction. Secretary Taft has endeavored to amerad his platform in this respect and to make some promises, which are not supported by his platform, but his promises offer nothing substantial in the way of reform and are not binding on republican senators and members. The republican congress has already made a record on labor questions, and the republican party cannot escape from that record.

While the laboring men have been the first to complain of this denial of the right of trial by jury in cases of indirect contempt, it ought not to be considered a labor question. The jury system is so essential to the administration of justice that the subject ought to appeal to all who right now.

Mr. Gompers thinks that the right way is for all labor unions to lay their votes in his basket like a lot of good, dutiful, political hens, and for him then to take his basket to market and peddle the contents to the republican party or the democratic
