Books and Magazines

"The Censorship of the Church of Rome and its Influence Upon the Production and the Distribution of Literature," by Georges Hison Putnam, Litt. D., is a study of the prohibitory and expurgatory indexes, together with some consideration of the effects of Protestant censorship and of censorship by the state. This treatise presents a schedule of the indexes issued by the more important of the decrees, edicts, prohibitions and briefs having to do with the prohibition of specific books, from the time of Gelasius I, 507 A. D., to the issue in 1907.

The McClure company is the publisher. The Macmillan company has published a new edition of Mr. W. S. Harwood's "New Creations in Plant Life," the authoritative account of the work of Luther Burbank. Since the book was published, about two years ago, Mr. Burbank has brought to success some of his most interesting experiments, and Mr. Harwood has, therefore, added a new chapter, bringing the book down to the present date. With its clear and untechnical exposition of the subject of plant breeding, and its many admirable illustrations, this is still by all odds the best account to be had of Burbank's work.

"Rose Macleod," by Alice Brown, is a story full of real people—a witty old lady and her elderly lover; an American art student from Paris and his eccentric brother, who has turned market gardener; Electra, a beautiful girl with a New England conscience and the heroine, Rose, whose sudden appearance in the family circle as the widow of Electra's brother leads to many amusing and startling complications. The heroine's father, in the character of a professional labor agitator, adds a note of grim seriousness to the narrative, in striking contrast to the pleasant domesticity of the scenes into which he is introduced. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. is the publisher.

of some episodes in his early life. Dr. Grey made an extended trip with the old hunter recently through the Arizona desert in pursuit of mountain lions and other large game, and personally knows this man, whose name is in many homes a household word. As there is no frontier today, in the sense that our fathers understood the term, it is a fascinating book full of adventure. The Outing Publishing company is the publisher.

"By Right Divine," by William Sage, author of "The District Attorney," is a present day romance of love and politics. The story deals with the struggle between a United States senator and a young governor for political supremacy in their native state, and is complicated by the love of the senator's daughter for both of the contestants. Senator Fordyce has held his state in his own hands for so long that he has come almost to believe that he has a divine right to be its ruler, and in the exercise of that right he employs methods which only an ambitious man of blunted conscience can employ. He views, first, with amusement and then with alarm, the increasingly successful efforts of an honest, clean-cut man, Governor Frank Thayer, to put the state in decent political order. The senator's redeeming feature is his strong love for his daughter, who in return, loves him, but gradually becomes enlightened as to the other side of his character, and recognizes the finer and nobler nature of the man who loves her, but who remains her father's consistent opponent. The book has a well-constructed plot, full of incidents, with a denouement which is original and somewhat unexpected. Published by Little, Brown & Co.

A volume on "School Reports and School Efficiency" (MacMillan), written by Prof. David Snedden and Dr. William H. Allen for the New York committee on physical welfare of school children, is commended to the educator who is interested in trying to measure the scope, outlay, work, and results of American public education. It shows briefly what the best of American cities have accomplished in making clear statistical exhibitions of work and results. American education is an expensive matter to the taxpayer, and especially in cities the outlay of money is great. Probably no other feature of our public administration is as free from corruption, but it is also true that few other departments fall below the school department in ability to make a comprehensive showing for money expended. In this volume are shown the various devices adopted by the more progressive cities to meet this defect. Published by the MacMillan company.

He Knows
Talk with your doctor about Ayer's non-alcoholic Sarsaparilla. Ask him if he prescribes it for pale, delicate children. Ask him if he recommends it when the blood is weak and impure, and when the nerves are thin and unsteady. Ask him if it aids nature in building up the general health. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
