Publications, obviously not of a particularly cheerful nature, are the Undertakers' Journal and the Hangman's Record, both published in the British capital. It is difficult to assign a reason for the latter, but as it is of respectable age, there must, of course, be a demand for the grim sort of news it dispenses.

PATHETIC CLOSE OF TRAGEDY How Edwin Booth in Dead of Night

Effects.

The November American Magazine con ains an article by Otis Skinner, the actor, entitled "The Last of John Wilkes Booth." It is the story of how Edwin Booth, in the dead of night, burned his brother's papers and costumes. The story was told by Otis Skinner by Garrie Davidson, who was "basket hoy" in Booth's theater in New York the child to me sooner. Last winter somein the early '70s.

After narrating how Edwin Booth came into the possession of his brother's effects after the assassination of Lincoln, Mr.

been one of storm and drifting snow, one of those belated days in New York when winter forgets to become spring. Mr. Booth had a snug suite of apartments high up was spent between his hours of business damp places is removed for all time. and acting in the theater. " Richard III' was on for a short run and had drawn a fine audience that night in spite of the storm. in the morning.

"After the lights of the theater had been put out, I lay on a cot in the property room, but I couldn't sleep-I shouldn't have dared. Mighty glad I was when the time to call him arrived; the three hours from midnight had been the longest I ever knew. "I mounted the stairway to his apart-library, I proceeded to make some strong called in and put an end to the disturbance. coffee. This done I opened the door of his bed, very still and thoughtful. I fetched the coffee I had made After drinking two cups of it he asked about the weather " Still snowing, Garrie?"

" 'Yes, sir.' "It's 3 o'clock, you say?" 'Yes, sir.'

"I helped him into his coat (he had lain down partly dressed), and took the lan-" 'Where are we going, Mr. Booth?' I asked. " To the furnace room, Garrie, he said. Then follows a description of how Booth burned his brother's papers and costumes.

Nothing Doing in a Healthy Town,

Although Boston to noted for its trying climate, in the little town of Carver, a nearby suburb, the two doctors have been obliged to turn to farming for a living because of the little demand for their professional services. Their rivalry as to who shall have the greater number of patients has been changed into desire to outdo each other in raising big cabbages, getting the greatest amount of cucumbers out of the smallest amount of soil, growing corn that will be fulleared and still sweet. Then medical books are growing dusty, and the village druggist says he has not had a prescription from them in ages. The people of the little village are fond of the two physicians and would like to aid them in earning a living, "but we just can't get sick," said one of them, hopelessly.

In a year there have been only three deaths among the 1,100 inhabitants. In a year Dr. Eiligh H. Cornish has made only seventeen calls for sickness, and in that same time Dr. George F. Morse has made only fifteen calls. A few weeks ago there was a mammoth clambake at the "center" might pick up a little the next day or two, but not a child, man or woman was touched with indigestion. Even two old men of 90 suffered no uneasiness from a liberal supply of clams, corn, chicken and "The only case I've had in eight months," mays Dr. Morse, "would not have resulted in death if the woman had only brought body had a little cold occasionally, or a child had the whooping cough or meastes and that was all."

The extreme healthfulness of the place Skinner goes on to report what Davidson is said to be due to the development of the low, swampy unhealthful lands into "It happened early in '73. The day had cranberry bogs. Carver has more cranberry bogs than any other town of its size in the world. One-tenth of all the land is used for them. It is claimed that when the swamps are sanded, drained and set over the stage, in which most of his time out with vines the unhealthfulness of these Both Dr. Morse and Dr. Cornish have lived in the town since they were young men, and now both are about 70 years old They have seen the town growing healthier "On leaving his dressing room about 13 and healthier and their profession becoming o'clock, he gave me orders to wake him at less and less lucrative, until now they have determined to stick to farming as their main business and merely practice medicine as a side line.-New York Press.
